THE UPANISHADS

TRANSLATED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

PART I

THE KHANDOGYA-UPANISHAD
THE TALAVAKĀRA-UPANISHAD
THE AITAREYA-ĀRAVYAKA
THE KAUSHITAKI-BRĀHMAVA-UPANISHAD
AND THE VÂGASANEYI-SAMHITĀ-UPANISHAD

Oxford
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
1879

[All rights reserved]
TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE MARQUIS OF SALISBURY, K.G.

CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD,

LATELY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA,

SIR HENRY J. S. MAINE, K.C.S.I.

MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL OF INDIA,

AND

THE VERY REV. H. G. LIDDELL, D.D.

DEAN OF CHRIST CHURCH,

TO WHOSE KIND INTEREST AND EXERTIONS

THIS ATTEMPT TO MAKE KNOWN TO THE ENGLISH PEOPLE

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

IS SO LARGELY INDEBTED,

I NOW DEDICATE THESE VOLUMES

WITH SINCERE RESPECT AND GRATITUDE,

F. MAX MÜLLER.
The general inclinations which are naturally implanted in my soul to some religion, it is impossible for me to shift off: but there being such a multiplicity of religions in the world, I desire now seriously to consider with my self which of them all to restrain these my general inclinations to. And the reason of this my enquiry is not, that I am in the least dissatisfied with that religion I have already embraced; but because 'tis natural for all men to have an overbearing opinion and esteem for that particular religion they are born and bred-up in. That, therefore, I may not seem biassed by the prejudice of education, I am resolved to prove and examine them all; that I may see and hold fast to that which is best.

Indeed there was never any religion so barbarous and diabolical, but it was preferred before all other religions whatsoever, by them that did profess it; otherwise they would not have professed it. And why, say they, may not you be mistaken as well as we? Especially when there is, at least, six to one against your Christian religion; all of which think they serve God aright; and expect happiness thereby as well as you. And hence it is that in my looking out for the truest religion, being conscious to my self how great an ascendant Christianity holds over me beyond the rest, as being that religion whereinto I was born and baptized, that which the supreme authority has enjoined and my parents educated me in; that which every one I meet withal highly approves of, and which I my self have, by a long continued profession, made almost natural to me: I am resolved to be more jealous and suspicious of this religion, than of the rest, and be sure not to entertain it any longer without being convinced by solid and substantial arguments, of the truth and certainty of it. That, therefore, I may make diligent and impartial enquiry into all religions and so be sure to find out the best, I shall for a time, look upon my self as one not at all interested in any particular religion whatsoever, much less in the Christian religion; but only as one who desires, in general, to serve and obey Him that made me, in a right manner, and thereby to be made partaker of that happiness my nature is capable of.

Bishop Beveridge (1636–1707).

Private Thoughts on Religion, Part I, Article 2.
CONTENTS.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Contents</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Preface to the Sacred Books of the East</td>
<td>ix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Program of a Translation of the Sacred Books of the East</td>
<td>xxxix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets</td>
<td>xlvii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Approximate Pronunciation of the Roman Letters as representing the Sanskrit Alphabet</td>
<td>lv</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction to the Upanishads</td>
<td>lvii</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kḥāndogya-upanishad</td>
<td>lxxxvi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talavakāra-upanishad</td>
<td>lxxxix</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aitareya-āranyaka</td>
<td>xci</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad</td>
<td>xcvi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vāgasaneyi-samhitā-upanishad</td>
<td>c</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translation of the Kḥāndogya-upanishad</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translation of the Talavakāra-upanishad</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translation of the Aitareya-āranyaka</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translation of the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad</td>
<td>271</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Translation of the Vāgasaneyi-samhitā-upanishad</td>
<td>311</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
PREFACE

TO

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

I must begin this series of translations of the Sacred Books of the East with three cautions:—the first, referring to the character of the original texts here translated; the second, with regard to the difficulties in making a proper use of translations; the third, showing what is possible and what is impossible in rendering ancient thought into modern speech.

Readers who have been led to believe that the Vedas of the ancient Brahmans, the Avesta of the Zoroastrians, the Tripitaka of the Buddhists, the Kings of Confucius, or the Koran of Mohammed are books full of primeval wisdom and religious enthusiasm, or at least of sound and simple moral teaching, will be disappointed on consulting these volumes. Looking at many of the books that have lately been published on the religions of the ancient world, I do not wonder that such a belief should have been raised; but I have long felt that it was high time to dispel such illusions, and to place the study of the ancient religions of the world on a more real and sound, on a more truly historical basis. It is but natural that those who write on ancient religions, and who have studied them from translations only, not from original documents, should have had eyes for their bright rather than for their dark sides. The former absorb all the attention of the student, the latter, as they teach nothing, seem hardly to deserve any notice. Scholars also who have devoted their life either to the editing of the original texts or to the careful interpretation of some of the sacred books, are more inclined, after they have disinterred from a heap of rubbish some solitary fragments of pure gold, to exhibit these treasures only than to display all the refuse from which they had to extract them. I do not blame them for this, perhaps I should feel that I was open to the same blame myself, for it is but natural that scholars in their joy at finding one or two fragrant fruits or flowers should gladly forget the brambles and thorns that had to be thrown aside in the course of their search.

But whether I am myself one of the guilty or not, I cannot help calling attention to the real mischief that has been done and is still being done by the enthusiasm of those pioneers who have opened the first avenues through the bewildering forest of the sacred literature of the East. They have raised expectations that cannot be fulfilled, fears also that, as will be easily seen, are unfounded. Anyhow they have removed the study of religion from that wholesome and matter-of-fact atmosphere in which alone it can produce valuable and permanent results.

The time has come when the study of the ancient religions of mankind must be approached in a different, in a less enthusiastic, and more discriminating, in fact, in a more scholarlike spirit. Not that I object to dilettanti, if they only are what by their name they profess to be, devoted lovers, and not mere amateurs. The religions of antiquity must always be approached in a loving spirit, and the dry and cold-blooded scholar is likely to do here as much mischief as the enthusiastic sciolist. But true love does not ignore all faults and failings: on the contrary, it scans them keenly, though only in order to be able to understand, to explain, and thus to excuse them. To watch in the Sacred Books of the East the dawn of the religious consciousness of man, must always remain one of the most inspiring and hallowing sights in the whole history of the world; and he whose heart cannot quiver with the first quivering rays of human thought and human faith, as revealed in those ancient documents, is, in his own way, as unfit for these studies as, from another side, the man who shrinks from copying and collating ancient MSS., or toiling through volumes of tedious commentary. What we want here, as everywhere else, is the truth, and the whole truth; and if the whole truth must be told, it is that, however radiant the dawn of religious thought, it is not without its dark clouds, its chilling colds, its noxious vapours. Whoever does not know these, or would hide them from his own sight and from the sight of others, does not know and can never understand the real toil and travail of the human heart in its first religious aspirations; and not knowing its toil and travail, can never know the intensity of its triumphs and its joys.

In order to have a solid foundation for a comparative study of the religions of the East, we must have before all things complete and thoroughly faithful translations of their sacred books. Extracts will no longer suffice. We do not know Germany, if we know the Rhine; nor Rome, when we have admired St. Peter's. No one who collects and publishes such extracts can resist, no one at all events, so far as I know, has ever resisted, the temptation of giving what is beautiful, or it may be what is strange and startling, and leaving out what is commonplace, tedious, or it may be repulsive, or, lastly, what is difficult to construe and to understand. We must face the problem in its completeness, and I confess it has been for many years a problem to me, aye, and to a great extent is so still, how the Sacred Books of the East should, by the side of so much that is fresh, natural, simple, beautiful, and true, contain so much that is not only unmeaning, artificial, and silly, but even hideous and repellent. This is a fact, and must be accounted for in some way or other.

To some minds this problem may seem to be no problem at all. To those (and I do not speak of Christians only) who look upon the sacred books of all religions except their own as necessarily the outcome of human or superhuman ignorance and depravity, the mixed nature of their contents may seem to be exactly what it ought to be, what they expected it would be. But there are other and more reverent minds who can feel a divine afflatus in the sacred books, not only of their own, but of other religions also, and to them the mixed character of some of the ancient sacred canons must always be extremely perplexing.

I can account for it to a certain extent, though not entirely to my own satisfaction. Most of the ancient sacred books have been handed down by oral tradition for many generations before they were consigned to writing. In an age when there was nothing corresponding to what we call literature, every saying, every proverb, every story handed down from father to son, received very soon a kind of hallowed character. They became sacred heirlooms, sacred, because they came from an unknown source, from a distant age. There was a stage in the development of human thought, when the distance that separated the living generation from their grandparents or great-grandfathers was as yet the nearest approach to a conception of eternity, and when the name of grandfather and great-grandfather seemed the nearest expression of God. Hence, what had been said by these half-human, half-divine ancestors, if it was preserved at all, was soon looked upon as a more than human utterance. It was received with reverence, it was never questioned and criticised.

Some of these ancient sayings were preserved because they were so true and so striking that they could not be forgotten. They contained eternal truths, expressed for the first time in human language. Of such oracles of truth it was said in India that they had been heard, sruta, and from it arose the word sruti, the recognised term for divine revelation in Sanskrit.

But besides those utterances which had a vitality of their own, strong enough to defy the power of

---

1 Bishop Callaway, Unkulunkulu, or the Tradition of Creation, as existing among the Amazulu and other tribes of South Africa, p. 7. time, there were others which might have struck the minds of the listeners with great force under the peculiar circumstances that evoked them, but which, when these circumstances were forgotten, became trivial and almost unintelligible. A few verses sung by warriors on the eve of a great battle would, if that battle ended in victory, assume a charm quite independent of their poetic merit. They would be repeated in memory of the heroes who conquered, and of the gods who granted victory. But when the heroes, and the gods, and the victory were all forgotten, the song of victory and thanksgiving would often survive as a relic of the past, though almost unintelligible to later generations.

Even a single ceremonial act, performed at the time of a famine or an inundation, and apparently attended with a sudden and almost miraculous success, might often be preserved in the liturgical code of a family or a tribe with a superstitious awe entirely beyond our understanding. It might be repeated for some time on similar emergencies, till when it had failed again and again it survived only as a superstitious custom in the memory of priests and poets.

Further, it should be remembered that in ancient as in modern times, the utterances of men who had once gained a certain prestige, would often receive attention far beyond their merits, so that in many a family or tribe the sayings and teachings of one man, who had once in his youth or manhood uttered words of inspired wisdom, would all be handed down together, without any attempt to separate the grain from the chaff.
Nor must we forget that though oral tradition, when once brought under proper discipline, is a most faithful guardian, it is not without its dangers in its incipient stages. Many a word may have been misunderstood, many a sentence confused, as it was told by father to son, before it became fixed in the tradition of a village community, and then resisted by its very sacredness all attempts at emendation.

Lastly, we must remember that those who handed down the ancestral treasures of ancient wisdom, would often feel inclined to add what seemed useful to themselves, and what they knew could be preserved in one way only, namely, if it was allowed to form part of the tradition that had to be handed down, as a sacred trust, from generation to generation. The priestly influence was at work, even before there were priests by profession, and when the priesthood had once become professional, its influence may account for much that would otherwise seem inexplicable in the sacred codes of the ancient world.

These are some of the considerations which may help to explain how, mixed up with real treasures of thought, we meet in the sacred books with so many passages and whole chapters which either never had any life or meaning at all, or if they had, have, in the form in which they have come down to us, completely lost it. We must try to imagine what the Old Testament would have been, if it had not been kept distinct from the Talmud; or the New Testament, if it had been mixed up not only with the spurious gospels, but with the, records of the wranglings of the early Councils, if we wish to understand, to some extent at least, the wild confusion of sublime truth.
with vulgar stupidity that meets us in the pages of the Veda, the Avesta, and the Tripitaka. The idea of keeping the original and genuine tradition separate from apocryphal accretions was an idea of later growth, that could spring up only after the earlier tendency of preserving whatever could be preserved of sacred or half-sacred lore, had done its work, and wrought its own destruction.

In using, what may seem to some of my fellow-workers, this very strong and almost irreverent language with regard to the ancient Sacred Books of the East, I have not neglected to make full allowance for that very important intellectual parallax which, no doubt, renders it most difficult for a Western observer to see things and thoughts under exactly the same angle and in the same light as they would appear to an Eastern eye. There are Western expressions which offend Eastern taste as much as Eastern expressions are apt to offend Western taste. A symphony of Beethoven's would be mere noise to an Indian ear, an Indian Saṅgīta seems to us without melody, harmony, or rhythm. All this I fully admit, yet after making every allowance for national taste and traditions, I still confidently appeal to the best Oriental scholars, who have not entirely forgotten that there is a world outside the four walls of their study, whether they think that my condemnation is too severe, or that Eastern nations themselves would tolerate, in any of their classical literary compositions, such violations of the simplest rules of taste as they have accustomed themselves to tolerate, if not to admire, in their sacred books.

But then it might no doubt be objected that books of such a character hardly deserve the honour of being translated into English, and that the sooner they are forgotten, the better. Such opinions have of late been freely expressed by some eminent writers, and supported by arguments worthy of the Khalif Omar himself. In these days of anthropological research, when no custom is too disgusting to be recorded, no rules of intermarriage too complicated to be disentangled, it may seem strange that the few genuine relics of ancient religion which, as by a miracle, have been preserved to us, should thus have been judged from a purely æsthetic, and not from an historical point of view. There was some excuse for this in the days of Sir William Jones and Colebrooke. The latter, as is well known, considered 'the Vedas as too voluminous for a complete translation of the whole,' adding that 'what they contain would hardly reward the labour of the reader; much less that of the translator.' The former went still further in the condemnation which he pronounced on Anquetil Duperron's translation of the Zend-avesta. Sir W. Jones, we must remember, was not only a scholar, but also a man of taste, and the man of taste sometimes gained a victory over the scholar. His controversy with Anquetil Duperron, the discoverer of the Zend-avesta, is well known. It was carried on by Sir W. Jones apparently with great success, and yet in the end the victor has proved to be the vanquished. It was easy, no doubt, to pick out from Anquetil Duperron's translation of the sacred writings of Zoroaster hundreds of passages which were or seemed to be utterly unmeaning or absurd. This arose partly, but partly only, from the imperfections of the translation. Much, however, of what Sir W. Jones represented as ridiculous, and therefore unworthy of Zoroaster, and therefore unworthy of being translated, forms an integral part of the sacred code of the Zoroastrians. Sir W. Jones smiles at those who 'think obscurity sublime and venerable, like that of ancient cloisters and temples, shedding,' as Milton expresses it, 'a dim religious light.' 'On possédait déjà,' he writes in his letter addressed to Anquetil Duperron, and composed in very good and sparkling French, 'plusieurs traités attribués à Zardusht ou Zeratusht, traduits en Persan moderne; de prétendues conférences de ce législateur avec Ormuzd, des prières, des dogmes, des lois religieuses. Quelques savans, qui ont lu ces traductions, nous ont assuré que les originaux étaient de la plus haute antiquité, parce qu'ils renfermaient beaucoup de platitudes, de bêtises, et de contradictions: mais nous avons conclu par les mêmes raisons, qu'ils étaient très-modernes, ou bien qu'ils n'étaient pas d'un homme d'esprit, et d'un philosophe, tel que Zoroastre est peint par nos historiens. Votre nouvelle traduction, Monsieur, nous confirme dans ce jugement: tout le collège des Guèbres aurait beau nous l'assurer; nous ne croirons jamais que le charlatan le moins habile ait pu écrire les fadaises dont vos deux derniers volumes sont remplis.'

He at last sums up his argument in the following words: 'Ou Zoroastre n'avait pas le sens commun, ou il n'écrivit pas le livre que vous lui attribuez: s'il n'avait pas le sens commun, il fallait le laisser dans la foule, et dans l'obscurité; s'il n'écrivit pas

---

1 Sir W. Jones's Works, vol. iv, p. 113.
2 Ib., vol. x, p. 408.
This alternative holds good no longer. The sacred code of Zoroaster or of any other of the founders of religions may appear to us to be full of absurdities, or may in fact really be so, and it may yet be the duty of the scholar to publish, to translate, and carefully to examine those codes as memorials of the past, as the only trustworthy documents in which to study the growth and decay of religion. It does not answer to say that if Zoroaster was what we believe him to have been, a wise man, in our sense of the word, he could not have written the rubbish which we find in the Avesta. If we are once satisfied that the text of the Avesta, or the Veda, or the Tripitaka is old and genuine, and that this text formed the foundation on which, during many centuries, the religious belief of millions of human beings was based, it becomes our duty, both as historians and philosophers, to study these books, to try to understand how they could have arisen, and how they could have exercised for ages an influence over human beings who in all other respects were not inferior to ourselves, nay, whom we are accustomed to look up to on many points as patterns of wisdom, of virtue, and of taste.

The facts, such as they are, must be faced, if the study of the ancient religions of the world is ever to assume a really historical character; and having myself grudged no praise to what to my mind is really beautiful or sublime in the early revelations of religious truth, I feel the less hesitation in fulfilling the duty of the true scholar, and placing before historians and philosophers accurate, complete, and unembellished versions of some of the sacred books of the East. Such versions alone will enable them to form a true and just estimate of the real development of early religious thought, so far as we can still gain a sight of it in literary records to which the highest human or even divine authority has been ascribed by the followers of the great religions of antiquity. It often requires an effort to spoil a beautiful sentence by a few words which might so easily be suppressed, but which are there in the original, and must be taken into account quite as much as the pointed ears in the beautiful Faun of the Capitol. We want to know the ancient religions such as they really were, not such as we wish they should have been. We want to know, not their wisdom only, but their folly also; and while we must learn to look up to their highest points where they seem to rise nearer to heaven than anything we were acquainted with before, we must not shrink from looking down into their stony tracts, their dark abysses, their muddy moraines, in order to comprehend both the heighth and the depth of the human mind in its searchings after the Infinite.

---

I can answer for myself and for those who have worked with me, that our translations are truthful, that we have suppressed nothing, that we have varnished nothing, however hard it seemed sometimes even to write it down.

There is only one exception. There are in ancient books, and particularly in religious books, frequent allusions to the sexual aspects of nature, which, though perfectly harmless and innocent in themselves, cannot be rendered in modern language without the appearance of coarseness. We may regret that it should be so, but tradition is too strong on this point, and I have therefore felt obliged to leave certain passages untranslated, and to give the original, when necessary, in a note. But this has been done in extreme cases only, and many things which we should feel inclined to suppress have been left in all their outspoken simplicity, because those who want to study ancient man, must learn to study him as he really was, an animal, with all the strength and weaknesses of an animal, though an animal that was to rise above himself, and in the end discover his true self, after many struggles and many defeats.

After this first caution, which I thought was due to those who might expect to find in these volumes nothing but gems, I feel I owe another to those who may approach these translations under the impression that they have only to read them in order to gain an insight into the nature and character of the religions of mankind. There are philosophers who have accustomed themselves to look upon religions as things that can be studied as they study the manners and customs of savage tribes, by glancing at the entertaining accounts of travellers or missionaries, and then classing each religion under such wide categories as fetishism, polytheism, monotheism, and the rest. That is not the case. Translations can do much, but they can never take the place of the originals, and if the originals require not only to be read, but to be read again and again, translations of sacred books require to be studied with much greater care, before we can hope to gain a real understanding of the intentions of their authors or venture on general assertions.

Such general assertions, if once made, are difficult to extirpate. It has been stated, for instance, that the religious notion of sin is wanting altogether in the hymns of the Rig-veda, and some important conclusions have been based on this supposed fact. Yet the gradual growth of the concept of guilt is one of the most interesting lessons which certain passages of these ancient hymns can teach us. It has been asserted that in the Rig-veda Agni, fire, was adored essentially as earthly sacrificial fire, and not as an elemental force. How greatly such an assertion has to be qualified, may be seen from a more careful examination of the translations of the Vedic hymns now accessible. In many parts of the Avesta fire is no doubt spoken of with great reverence, but those who speak of the Zoroastrians as fire-worshippers, should know that the true followers of Zoroaster abhor that very name. Again, there are certainly many passages in the Vedic writings which prohibit the promiscuous communication of the Veda, but those who maintain that the Brahmans, like Roman Catholic priests, keep their sacred books from the people, must have forgotten the many passages in the Brâhmanas, the Sûtras, and even in the Laws of Manu, where the duty of learning the Veda by heart is inculcated for every Brâhmaṇa, Kshatriya, Vaisya, that is, for every man except a Śūdra.

These are a few specimens only to show how dangerous it is to generalise even where there exist complete translations of certain sacred books. It is far easier to misapprehend, or even totally to misunderstand, a translation than the original; and it should not be supposed, because a sentence or a whole chapter seems at first sight unintelligible in a translation, that therefore they are indeed devoid of all meaning.

What can be more perplexing than the beginning of the Khândogya-upanishad? 'Let a man meditate,' we read, or, as others translate it, 'Let a man worship the syllable Om.' It may seem impossible at first sight to elicit any definite meaning from these words and from much that follows after. But it would be a mistake, nevertheless, to conclude that we have here vox et praetera nihil. Meditation on the syllable Om consisted in a long-continued repetition of that syllable with a view of drawing the thoughts away from all other subjects, and thus concentrating them on some higher object of thought of which that syllable was made to be the symbol. This concentration of thought, ekâ-gratâ or one-pointedness, as the Hindus called it, is something to us almost unknown. Our minds are like kaleidoscopes of thoughts in constant motion; and to shut our mental eyes to everything else, while dwelling on one thought only, has become to most of us almost as impossible as to apprehend one musical note without harmonics. With the life we are leading now, with telegrams, letters, newspapers, reviews, pamphlets, and books ever breaking in upon us, it has become impossible, or almost impossible, ever to arrive at that intensity of thought which the Hindus meant by ekágratā, and the attainment of which was to them the indispensable condition of all philosophical and religious speculation. The loss may not be altogether on our side, yet a loss it is, and if we see the Hindus, even in their comparatively monotonous life, adopting all kinds of contrivances in order to assist them in drawing away their thoughts from all disturbing impressions and to fix them on one subject only, we must not be satisfied with smiling at their simplicity, but try to appreciate the object they had in view.

When by means of repeating the syllable Om, which originally seems to have meant 'that,' or 'yes,' they had arrived at a certain degree of mental tranquillity, the question arose what was meant by this Om, and to this question the most various answers were given, according as the mind was to be led up to higher and higher objects. Thus in one passage we are told at first that Om is the beginning of the Veda, or, as we have to deal with an Upanishad of the Sâma-veda, the beginning of the Sâma-veda, so that he who meditates on Om, may be supposed to be meditating on the whole of the Sâma-veda. But that is not enough. Om is said to be the essence of the Sâma-veda, which, being almost entirely taken from the Rig-veda, may itself be called the essence of the Rig-veda. And more than that. The Rig-veda stands for all speech, the Sâma-veda for all breath or life, so that Om may be conceived again as the symbol of all speech and all life. Om thus becomes the name, not only of all our physical and mental powers, but especially of the living principle, the Prâna or spirit. This is explained by the parable in the second chapter, while in the third chapter, that spirit within us is identified with the spirit in the sun. He therefore who meditates on Om, meditates on the spirit in man as identical with the spirit in nature, or in the sun; and thus the lesson that is meant to be taught in the beginning of the Khândogya-upanishad is really this, that none of the Vedas with their sacrifices and ceremonies could ever secure the salvation of the worshipper, i.e. that sacred works, performed according to the rules of the Vedas, are of no avail in the end, but that meditation on Om alone, or that knowledge of what is meant by Om alone, can procure true salvation, or true immortality. Thus the pupil is led on step by step to what is the highest object of the Upanishads, viz. the recognition of the self in man as identical with the Highest Self or Brahman. The lessons which are to lead up to that highest conception of the universe, both subjective and objective, are no doubt mixed up with much that is superstitious and absurd; still the main object is never lost sight of. Thus, when we come to the eighth chapter, the discussion, though it begins with Om or the Udgîtha, ends with the question of the origin of the world; and though the final answer, namely, that Om means ether (âkâsa), and that ether is the origin of all things, may still sound to us more physical than metaphysical, still the description given of ether or âkâsa, shows that more is meant by it than the physical ether, and that ether is in fact one of the earlier and less perfect names of the Infinite, of Brahman, the universal Self. This, at least, is the lesson which the Brahmans themselves read in this chapter; and if we look at the ancient language of the Upanishads as representing mere attempts at finding expression for what their language could hardly express as yet, we shall, I think, be less inclined to disagree with the interpretation put on those ancient oracles by the later Vedânta philosophers, or, at all events, we shall hesitate before we reject what is difficult to interpret, as altogether devoid of meaning.

This is but one instance to show that even behind the fantastic and whimsical phraseology of the sacred writings of the Hindus and other Eastern nations, there may be sometimes aspirations after truth which deserve careful consideration from the student of the psychological development and the historical growth of early religious thought, and that after careful sifting, treasures may be found in what at first we may feel inclined to throw away as utterly worthless.

And now I come to the third caution. Let it not be supposed that a text, three thousand years old, or, even if of more modern date, still widely distant from our own sphere of thought, can be translated in the same manner as a book

1 The Upanishad itself says: 'The Brahman is the same as the ether which is around us; and the ether which is around us, is the same as the ether which is within us. And the ether which is within, that is the ether within the heart. That ether in the heart is omnipresent and unchanging. He who knows this obtains omnipresent and unchangeable happiness.' Kh. Up. III, 12, 7-9.

2 Cf. Vedânta-sūtras I, 1, 22.
written a few years ago in French or German. Those who know French and German well enough, know how difficult, nay, how impossible it is, to render justice to certain touches of genius which the true artist knows how to give to a sentence. Many poets have translated Heine into English or Tennyson into German, many painters have copied the Madonna di San Sisto or the so-called portrait of Beatrice Cenci. But the greater the excellence of these translators, the more frank has been their avowal, that the original is beyond their reach. And what is a translation of modern German into modern English compared with a translation of ancient Sanskrit or Zend or Chinese into any modern language? It is an undertaking which, from its very nature, admits of the most partial success only, and a more intimate knowledge of the ancient language, so far from facilitating the task of the translator, renders it only more hopeless. Modern words are round, ancient words are square, and we may as well hope to solve the quadrature of the circle, as to express adequately the ancient thoughts of the Veda in modern English.

We must not expect therefore that a translation of the sacred books of the ancients can ever be more than an approximation of our language to theirs, of our thoughts to theirs. The translator, however, if he has once gained the conviction that it is impossible to translate old thought into modern speech, without doing some violence either to the one or to the other, will hardly hesitate in his choice between two evils. He will prefer to do some violence to language rather than to misrepresent old thoughts by clothing them in words which do not fit them. If therefore the reader finds some of these translations rather rugged, if he meets with expressions which sound foreign, with combinations of nouns and adjectives such as he has never seen before, with sentences that seem too long or too abrupt, let him feel sure that the translator has had to deal with a choice of evils, and that when the choice lay between sacrificing idiom or truth, he has chosen the smaller evil of the two. I do not claim, of course, either for myself or for my fellow-workers, that we have always sacrificed as little as was possible of truth or idiom, and that here and there a happier rendering of certain passages may not be suggested by those who come after us. I only wish to warn the reader once more not to expect too much from a translation, and to bear in mind that, easy as it might be to render word by word, it is difficult, aye, sometimes impossible, to render thought by thought.

I shall give one instance only from my own translation of the Upanishads. One of the most important words in the ancient philosophy of the Brahmans is Âtman, nom. sing. Âtmâ. It is rendered in our dictionaries by 'breath, soul, the principle of life and sensation, the individual soul, the self, the abstract individual, self, one's self, the reflexive pronoun, the natural temperament or disposition, essence, nature, character, peculiarity, the person or the whole body, the body, the understanding, intellect, the mind, the faculty of thought and reason, the thinking faculty, the highest principle of life, Brahma, the supreme deity or soul of the universe, care, effort, pains, firmness, the sun, fire, wind, air, a son.'
This will give classical scholars an idea of the chaotic state from which, thanks to the excellent work done by Boehtlingk, Roth, and others, Sanskrit lexicology is only just emerging. Some of the meanings here mentioned ought certainly not to be ascribed to ātman. It never means, for instance, the understanding, nor could it ever by itself be translated by sun, fire, wind, air, pains or firmness. But after deducting such surplusage, there still remains a large variety of meanings which may, under certain circumstances, be ascribed to ātman.

When ātman occurs in philosophical treatises, such as the Upanishads and the Vedânta system which is based on them, it has generally been translated by soul, mind, or spirit. I tried myself to use one or other of these words, but the oftener I employed them, the more I felt their inadequacy, and was driven at last to adopt self and Self as the least liable to misunderstanding.

No doubt in many passages it sounds strange in English to use self, and in the plural selves instead of selves; but that very strangeness is useful, for while such words as soul and mind and spirit pass over us unrealised, self and selves will always ruffle the surface of the mind, and stir up some reflection in the reader. In English to speak even of the I and the Non-I, was till lately considered harsh; it may still be called a foreign philosophical idiom. In German the Ich and Nicht-ich have, since the time of Fichte, become recognised and almost familiar, not only as philosophical terms, but as legitimate expressions in the literary language of the day. But while the Ich with Fichte expressed the highest abstraction of personal existence, the corresponding word in Sanskrit, the Aham or Ahaṅkāra, was always looked upon as a secondary development only, and as by no means free from all purely phenomenal ingredients. Beyond the Aham or Ego, with all its accidents and limitations, such as sex, sense, language, country, and religion, the ancient sages of India perceived, from a very early time, the Âtman or the self, independent of all such accidents.

The individual âtman or self, however, was with the Brahmans a phase or phenomenal modification only of the Highest Self, and that Highest Self was to them the last point which could be reached by philosophical speculation. It was to them what in other systems of philosophy has been called by various names, ṛò ṯv, the Divine, the Absolute. The highest aim of all thought and study with the Brahman of the Upanishads was to recognise his own self as a mere limited reflection of the Highest Self, to know his self in the Highest Self, and through that knowledge to return to it, and regain his identity with it. Here to know was to be, to know the Âtman was to be the Âtman, and the reward of that highest knowledge after death was freedom from new births, or immortality.

That Highest Self which had become to the ancient Brahmans the goal of all their mental efforts, was looked upon at the same time as the starting-point of all phenomenal existence, the root of the world, the only thing that could truly be said to be, to be real and true. As the root of all that exists, the Âtman was identified with the Brahman, which in Sanskrit is both masculine and neuter, and with the Sat, which is neuter only, that which is, or Satya, the true, the real. It alone exists in the beginning and for ever; it has no second. Whatever else is said to exist, derives its real being from the Sat. How the one Sat became many, how what we call the creation, what they call emanation (πρόοδος), constantly proceeds and returns to it, has been explained in various more or less fanciful ways by ancient prophets and poets. But what they all agree in is this, that the whole creation, the visible and invisible world, all plants, all animals, all men are due to the one Sat, are upheld by it, and will return to it.

If we translate Atman by soul, mind, or spirit, we commit, first of all, that fundamental mistake of using words which may be predicated, in place of a word which is a subject only, and can never become a predicate. We may say in English that man possesses a soul, that a man is out of his mind, that man has or even that man is a spirit, but we could never predicate atmán, or self, of anything else. Spirit, if it means breath or life; mind, if it means the organ of perception and conception; soul, if, like kaitanya, it means intelligence in general, all these may be predicated of the Atman, as manifested in the phenomenal world. But they are never subjects in the sense in which the Atman is; they have no independent being, apart from Atman. Thus to translate the beginning of the Aitareya-upanishad, Átmā vá idam eka evāgra ásit, by 'This (world) verily was before (the creation of the world) soul alone' (Röer); or, 'Originally this (universe) was indeed soul only' (Colebrooke), would give us a totally false idea. M. Regnaud in his 'Matériaux pour servir à l'histoire de la philo-sophie de l'Inde' (vol. ii, p. 24) has evidently felt this, and has kept the word átman untranslated, 'Au commencement cet univers n'était que l'átman.' But while in French it would seem impossible to find any equivalent for átman, I have ventured to translate in English, as I should have done in German, 'Verily, in the beginning all this was Self, one only.'

Thus again when we read in Sanskrit, 'Know the Self by the self;' átmānam átmanā pasya, tempting as it may seem, it would be entirely wrong to render it by the Greek γνῶθι σεαυτόν. The Brahman called upon his young pupil to know not himself, but his Self, that is, to know his individual self as a merely temporary reflex of the Eternal Self. Were we to translate this so-called átmavidyā, this self-knowledge, by knowledge of the soul, we should not be altogether wrong, but we should nevertheless lose all that distinguishes Indian from Greek thought. It may not be good English to say to know his self, still less to know our selves, but it would be bad Sanskrit to say to know himself, to know ourselves; or, at all events, such a rendering would deprive us of the greatest advantage in the study of Indian philosophy, the opportunity of seeing in how many different ways man has tried to solve the riddles of the world and of his soul.

I have thought it best therefore to keep as close as possible to the Sanskrit original, and where I could not find an adequate term in English, I have often retained the Sanskrit word rather than use a misleading substitute in English. It is impossible, for instance, to find an English equivalent for so simple a word as Sat, τὸ ὅι. We cannot render the Greek τὸ ov and τὸ μὴ ὄν by Being or Not-being, for both are abstract nouns; nor by 'the Being,' for this would almost always convey a wrong impression. In German it is easy to distinguish between das Sein, i.e. being, in the abstract, and das Seiende, τὸ ὄν. In the same way the Sanskrit sat can easily be rendered in Greek by τὸ ὄν, in German by das Seiende, but in English, unless we say 'that which is,' we are driven to retain the original Sat.

From this Sat was derived in Sanskrit Sat-ya, meaning originally 'endowed with being,' then 'true.' This is an adjective; but the same word, as a neuter, is also used in the sense of truth, as an abstract; and in translating it is very necessary always to distinguish between Satyam, the true, frequently the same as Sat, τὸ ὄν, and Satyam, truth, veracity. One example will suffice to show how much the clearness of a translation depends on the right rendering of such words as ātman, sat, and satyam.

In a dialogue between Uddālaka and his son Svetaketu, in which the father tries to open his son's mind, and to make him see man's true relation to the Highest Self (Khāndogya-upanishad VI), the father first explains how the Sat produced what we should call the three elements, viz. fire, water, and earth, which he calls heat, water, and food. Having produced them (VI, 2, 4), the Sat entered into them, but not with its real nature, but only with its 'living self' (VI, 3, 3), which is a reflection (abhāsamātram) of the real Sat, as the sun in the water is a reflection of the real sun. By this apparent union of the Sat with the three elements, every form (rūpa) and every name (nāman) in the world was produced; and therefore he who knows the three elements is supposed to know everything in this world, nearly in the same manner in which the Greeks imagined that through a knowledge of the elements, everything else became known (VI, 4, 7). The same three elements are shown to be also the constituent elements of man (VI, 5). Food or the earthy element is supposed to produce not only flesh, but also mind; water, not only blood, but also breath; heat, not only bone, but also speech. This is more or less fanciful; the important point, however, is this, that, from the Brahmanic point of view, breath, speech, and mind are purely elemental, or external instruments, and require the support of the living self, the givatman, before they can act.

1 Devatâs, literally deities, but frequently to be translated by powers or beings. Mahadeva Moreshvar Kunte, the learned editor of the Vedânta-sûtras, ought not (p. 70) to have rendered devâta, in Kh. Up. I, 11, 5, by goddess.

Having explained how the Sat produces progressively heat, how heat leads to water, water to earth, and how, by a peculiar mixture of the three, speech, breath, and mind are produced, the teacher afterwards shows how in death, speech returns to mind, mind to breath, breath to heat, and heat to the Sat (VI, 8, 6). This Sat, the root of everything, is called parā devatā, the highest deity, not in the ordinary sense of the word deity, but as expressing the highest abstraction of the human mind. We must therefore translate it by the Highest Being, in the same manner as we translate devatā, when applied to heat, water, and earth, not by deity, but by substance or element.

The same Sat, as the root or highest essence of all material existence, is called anīman, from anu, small, subtile, infinitesimal, atom. It is an abstract word, and I have translated it by subtile essence.

The father then goes on explaining in various ways that this Sat is underlying all existence, and that we must learn to recognise it as the root, not only of all the objective, but likewise of our own subjective existence. 'Bring the fruit of a Nyagrodha tree,' he says, 'break it, and what do you find?' 'The seeds,' the son replies, 'almost infinitesimal.' 'Break one of them, and tell me what you see.' 'Nothing,' the son replies. Then the father continues: 'My son, that subtile essence which you do not see there, of that very essence this great Nyagrodha tree exists.'

After that follows this sentence: 'Etadâtmyam idam sarvam, tat satyam, sa âtma, tat tvam asi Svetaketô.'

This sentence has been rendered by Rajendralal Mitra in the following way: 'All this universe has the (Supreme) Deity for its life. That Deity is Truth. He is the Universal Soul. Thou art He, O Svetaketu.'

This translation is quite correct, as far as the words go, but I doubt whether we can connect any definite thoughts with these words. In spite of the division adopted in the text, I believe it will be necessary to join this sentence with the last words of the preceding paragraph. This is clear from the commentary, and from later paragraphs, where this sentence is repeated, VI, 9, 4, &c. The division

1 Anquetil Duperron translates: 'Ipso hoc modo (ens) illud est subtile: et hoc omne, unus âtma est: et id verum et rectum est, O Sopatkit, tatoumes, id est, ille âtma tu as.' in the printed text (VI, 8, 6) is wrong, and VI, 8, 7 should begin with sa ya esho 'nimâ, i. e. that which is the subtile essence.

The question then is, what is further to be said about this subtile essence. I have ventured to translate the passage in the following way:

‘That which is the subtile essence (the Sat, the root of everything), in it all that exists has its self, or more literally, its self-hood. It is the True (not the Truth in the abstract, but that which truly and really exists). It is the Self, i. e. the Sat is what is called the Self of everything.' Lastly, he sums up, and tells Svetaketu that, not only the whole world, but he too himself is that Self, that Satya, that Sat.

No doubt this translation sounds strange to English ears, but as the thoughts contained in the Upanishads are strange, it would be wrong to smoothe down their strangeness by clothing them in language familiar to us, which, because it is familiar, will fail to startle us, and because it fails to startle us, will fail also to set us thinking.

To know oneself to be the Sat, to know that all that is real and eternal in us is the Sat, that all came from it and will, through knowledge, return to it, requires an independent effort of speculative thought.
We must realise, as well as we can, the thoughts of the ancient Rishis, before we can hope to translate them. It is not enough simply to read the half-religious, half-philosophical utterances which we find in 1 The change of gender in sa for tad is idiomatic. One could not say in Sanskrit tad âtmâ, it is the Self, but sa âtmâ. By sa, he, the Sat, that which is, is meant. The commentary explains sa âtmâ by tat sat, and continues tat sat tat tvam asi (p. 443).

the Sacred Books of the East, and to say that they are strange, or obscure, or mystic. Plato is strange, till we know him; Berkeley is mystic, till for a time we have identified ourselves with him. So it is with these ancient sages, who have become the founders of the great religions of antiquity. They can never be judged from without, they must be judged from within. We need not become Brahmans or Buddhists or Taosze altogether, but we must for a time, if we wish to understand, and still more, if we are bold enough to undertake to translate their doctrines. Whoever shrinks from that effort, will see hardly anything in these sacred books or their translations but matter to wonder at or to laugh at; possibly something to make him thankful that he is not as other men. But to the patient reader these same books will, in spite of many drawbacks, open a new view of the history of the human race, of that one race to which we all belong, with all the fibres of our flesh, with all the fears and hopes of our soul. We cannot separate ourselves from those who believed in these sacred books. There is no specific difference between ourselves and the Brahmans, the Buddhists, the Zoroastrians, or the Taosze. Our powers of perceiving, of reasoning, and of believing may be more highly developed, but we cannot claim the possession of any verifying power or of any power of belief which they did not possess as well. Shall we say then that they were forsaken of God, while we are His chosen people? God forbid! There is much, no doubt, in their sacred books which we should tolerate no longer, though we must not forget that there are portions in our own sacred books, too, which many of us would wish to be absent, which, from the earliest ages of Christianity, have been regretted by theologians of undoubted piety, and which often prove a stumblingblock to those who have been won over by our missionaries to the simple faith of Christ. But that is not the question. The question is, whether there is or whether there is not, hidden in every one of the sacred books, something that could lift up the human heart from this earth to a higher world, something that could make man feel the omnipresence of a higher Power, something that could make him shrink from evil and incline to good, something to sustain him in the short journey through life, with its bright moments of happiness, and its long hours of terrible distress.

If some of those who read and mark these translations learn how to discover some such precious grains in the sacred books of other nations, though hidden under heaps of rubbish, our labour will not have been in vain, for there is no lesson which at the present time seems more important than to learn that in every religion there are such precious grains; that we must draw in every religion a broad distinction between what is essential and what is not, between the eternal and the temporary, between the divine and the human; and that though the non-essential may fill many volumes, the essential can often be comprehended in a few words, but words on which 'hang all the law and the prophets.'
I here subjoin the program in which I first put forward the idea of a translation of the Sacred Books of the East, and through which I invited the co-operation of Oriental scholars in this undertaking. The difficulty of finding translators, both willing and competent to take a part in it, proved far greater than I had anticipated. Even when I had secured the assistance of a number of excellent scholars, and had received their promises of prompt co-operation, illness, domestic affliction, and even death asserted their control over all human affairs. Professor Childers, who had shown the warmest interest in our work, and on whom I chiefly depended for the Pali literature of the Buddhists, was taken from us, an irreparable loss to Oriental scholarship in general, and to our undertaking in particular. Among native scholars, whose co-operation I had been particularly desired to secure, Rajendralal Mitra, who had promised a translation of the Vāyu-purāṇa, was prevented by serious illness from fulfilling his engagement. In other cases sorrow and sickness have caused, at all events, serious delay in the translation of the very books which were to have inaugurated this Series. However, new offers of assistance have come, and I hope that more may still come from Oriental scholars both in India and England, so that the limit of time which had been originally assigned to the publication of twenty-four volumes may not, I hope, be much exceeded.

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST, TRANSLATED, WITH INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES, BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS, AND EDITED BY F. MAX MÜLLER.

Apart from the interest which the Sacred Books of all religions possess in the eyes of the theologian, and, more particularly, of the missionary, to whom an accurate knowledge of them is as indispensable as a knowledge of the enemy's country is to a general, these works have of late assumed a new importance, as viewed in the character of ancient historical documents. In every country where Sacred Books have been preserved, whether by oral tradition or by writing, they are the oldest records, and mark the beginning of what may be called documentary, in opposition to purely traditional, history.

There is nothing more ancient in India than the Vedas; and, if we except the Vedas and the literature connected with them, there is again no literary work in India which, so far as we know at present, can with certainty be referred to an earlier date than that of the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists. Whatever age we may assign to the various portions of the Avesta and to their final arrangement, there is no book in the Persian language of greater antiquity than the Sacred Books of the followers of Zarathustra, nay, even than their translation in Pehlevi. There may have been an extensive ancient literature in China long before Khung-fu-3ze and Lâo-3ze, but among all that was rescued and preserved of it, the five King and the four Shû claim again the highest antiquity. As to the Koran, it is known to be the fountain-head both of the religion and of the literature of the Arabs.

This being the case, it was but natural that the attention of the historian should of late have been more strongly attracted by these Sacred Books, as likely to afford most valuable information, not only on the religion, but also on the moral sentiments, the social institutions, the legal maxims of some of the most important nations of antiquity. There are not many nations that have preserved sacred writings, and many of those that have been preserved have but lately become accessible to us in their original form, through the rapid advance of Oriental scholarship in Europe. Neither Greeks, nor Romans, nor Germans, nor Celts, nor Slaves have left us anything that deserves the name of Sacred Books. The Homeric Poems are national Epics, like the Râmâyana, and the Nibelunge, and the Homeric Hymns have never received that general recognition or sanction which alone can impart to the poetical effusions of personal piety the sacred or canonical character which is the distinguishing feature of the Vedic Hymns. The sacred literature of the early inhabitants of Italy seems to have been of a liturgical rather than of a purely religious kind, and whatever the Celts, the Germans, the Slaves may have possessed of sacred traditions about their gods and heroes, having been handed down by oral tradition chiefly, has perished beyond all hope of recovery. Some portions of the Eddas alone give us an idea of what the religious and heroic poetry of the Scandinavians may have been. The Egyptians possessed Sacred Books, and some of them, such as the Book of the Dead, have come down to us in various forms. There is a translation of the Book of the Dead by Dr. Birch, published in the fifth volume of Bunsen’s Egypt, and a new edition and translation of this important work may be expected from the combined labours of Birch, Chabas, Lepsius, and Naville. In Babylon and Assyria, too, important fragments of what may be called a Sacred Literature have lately come to light. The interpretation, however, of these Hieroglyphic and Cuneiform texts is as yet so difficult that, for the present, they are of interest to the scholar only, and hardly available for historical purposes.

Leaving out of consideration the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, it appears that the only great and original religions which profess to be founded on Sacred Books¹, and have preserved them in manuscript, are:—

1. The religion of the Brahmans.
2. The religion of the followers of Buddha.
3. The religion of the followers of Zarathustra.
4. The religion of the followers of Khung-fū-ṣe.
5. The religion of the followers of Lāo-ṣe.
6. The religion of the followers of Mohammed.

A desire for a trustworthy translation of the Sacred Books of these six Eastern religions has often been expressed. Several have been translated into English, French, German, or Latin, but in some cases these translations are difficult to procure, in others they are loaded with notes and commentaries, which are intended for students by profession only. Oriental scholars have been blamed for not having as yet supplied a want so generally felt, and so frequently expressed, as a complete, trustworthy, and readable translation of the principal Sacred Books of the Eastern Religions. The reasons, however, why hitherto they have shrunk from such an undertaking are clear enough. The difficulties in many cases of giving complete translations, and not selections only, are very great. There is still much work to be done in a critical restoration of the original texts, in an examination of their grammar and metres, and in determining the exact meaning of many words and passages. That kind of work is naturally far more attractive to scholars than a mere translation, particularly when they cannot but feel that, with the progress of our knowledge, many a passage which now seems clear and easy, may, on being re-examined, assume a new import. Thus while scholars who are most competent to undertake a translation, prefer to devote their time to more special researches, the work of a complete translation is deferred to the future, and historians are left under the impression that Oriental scholarship is still in so unsatisfactory a state as to make any reliance on translations of the Veda, the Avesta, or the Tâo-te King extremely hazardous.

¹ Introduction to the Science of Religion, by F. Max Müller (Longmans, 1873), p. 104.

It is clear, therefore, that a translation of the principal Sacred Books of the East can be carried out only at a certain sacrifice. Scholars must leave for a time their own special researches in order to render the general results already obtained accessible to the public at large. And even then, really useful results can be achieved viribus unitis only. If four of the best Egyptologists have to combine in order to produce a satisfactory edition and translation of one of the Sacred Books of ancient Egypt, a much larger number of Oriental scholars will be required for translating the Sacred Books of the Brahmans, the Buddhists, the Zoroastrians, the followers of Khung-fû-3ze, Lâo-3ze, and Mohammed.

Lastly, there was the most serious difficulty of all, a difficulty which no scholar could remove, viz. the difficulty of finding the funds necessary for carrying out so large an undertaking. No doubt there exists at present a very keen interest in questions connected with the origin, the growth, and decay of religion. But much of that interest is theoretic rather than historical. How people might or could or should have elaborated religious ideas, is a topic most warmly discussed among psychologists and theologians, but a study of the documents, in which alone the actual growth of religious thought can be traced, is much neglected.
A faithful, unvarnished prose translation of the Sacred Books of India, Persia, China, and Arabia, though it may interest careful students, will never, I fear, excite a widespread interest, or command a circulation large enough to make it a matter of private enterprise and commercial speculation.

No doubt there is much in these old books that is startling by its very simplicity and truth, much that is elevated and elevating, much that is beautiful and sublime; but people who have vague ideas of primeval wisdom and the splendour of Eastern poetry will soon find themselves grievously disappointed. It cannot be too strongly stated, that the chief, and, in many cases, the only interest of the Sacred Books of the East is historical; that much in them is extremely childish, tedious, if not repulsive; and that no one but the historian will be able to understand the important lessons which they teach. It would have been impossible to undertake a translation even of the most important only of the Sacred Books of the East, without the support of an Academy or a University which recognises the necessity of rendering these works more generally accessible, on the same grounds on which it recognises the duty of collecting and exhibiting in Museums the petrifactions of bygone ages, little concerned whether the public admires the beauty of fossilised plants and broken skeletons, as long as hard-working students find there some light for reading once more the darker pages in the history of the earth.

Having been so fortunate as to secure that support, having also received promises of assistance from some of the best Oriental scholars in England and India, I hope I shall be able, after the necessary preparations are completed, to publish about three volumes of translations every year, selecting from the stores of the six so-called 'Book-religions' those works which at present can be translated, and which are most likely to prove useful. All translations will be made from the original texts, and where good translations exist already, they will be carefully revised by competent scholars. Such is the bulk of the religious literature of the Brahmans and the Buddhists, that to attempt a complete translation would be far beyond the powers of one generation of scholars. Still, if the interest in the work itself should continue, there is no reason why this series of translations should not be carried on, even after those who commenced it shall have ceased from their labours.

What I contemplate at present, and I am afraid at my time of life even this may seem too sanguine, is no more than a Series of twenty-four volumes, the publication of which will probably extend over eight years. In this Series I hope to comprehend the following books, though I do not pledge myself to adhere strictly to this outline:

1. From among the Sacred Books of the Brahmans I hope to give a translation of the Hymns of the Rig-veda. While I shall continue my translation of selected hymns of that Veda, a traduction raisonnée which is intended for Sanskrit scholars only, on the same principles which I have followed in the first volume, explaining every word and sentence that seems to require elucidation, and carefully examining the opinions of previous commentators, both native and European, I intend to contribute a freer translation of the hymns to this Series, with a few explanatory notes only, such as are absolutely necessary to enable readers who are unacquainted with Sanskrit to understand the thoughts of the Vedic poets. The translation of perhaps another Samhitā, one or two of the Brāhmaṇas, or portions of them, will have to be included in our Series, as well as the principal Upanishads, theosophic treatises of great interest and beauty. There is every prospect of an early appearance of a translation of the Bhagavad-gītā, of the most important among the sacred Law-books, and of one at least of the Purāṇas. I should have wished to include a translation of some of the Gain books, of the Granth of the Sikhs, and of similar works illustrative of the later developments of religion in India, but there is hardly room for them at present.

2. The Sacred Books of the Buddhists will be translated chiefly from the two original collections, the Southern in Pali, the Northern in Sanskrit. Here the selection will, no doubt, be most difficult. Among the first books to be published will be, I hope, Sūtras from the Dīgha Nikāya, a part of the Vinaya-piṭaka, the Dhammapada, the Divyāvadāna, the Lalita-vistara, or legendary life of Buddha.

3. The Sacred Books of the Zoroastrians lie within a smaller compass, but they will require fuller notes and commentaries in order to make a translation intelligible and useful.

4. The books which enjoy the highest authority with the followers of Khung-fù-że are the King and the Shû. Of the former the Shû King or Book of History; the Odes of the Temple and the Altar, and other pieces illustrating the ancient religious views and practices of the Chinese, in the Shih King or Book of Poetry; the Yi King; the Li K'i; and the Hsiao King or Classic of Filial Piety, will all be given, it is hoped, entire. Of the latter, the Series will contain the Kung Yung or Doctrine of the Mean; the Ta Hsio or Great Learning; all Confucius' utterances in the Lun Yu or Confucian Analects, which are of a religious nature, and refer to the principles of his moral system; and Mang-3ze's Doctrine of the Goodness of Human Nature.

5. For the system of Lào-3ze we require only a translation of the Tâo-teh King with some of its commentaries, and, it may be, an authoritative work to illustrate the actual operation of its principles.

6. For Islam, all that is essential is a trustworthy translation of the Koran.

It will be my endeavour to divide the twenty-four volumes which are contemplated in this Series as equally as possible among the six religions. But much must depend on the assistance which I receive from Oriental scholars, and also on the interest and the wishes of the public.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

Oxford, October, 1876.

The works which for the present have been selected for translation are the following:

I. ANCIENT VEDIC RELIGION.

Hymns of the Rîg-veda.
The Satapatha-brâhmaṇa.
The Upanishads.
The Grihya-sutras of Hiranyakesin and others.

II. LAW-BOOKS IN PROSE.
The Sutras of Ápastamba, Gautama, Baudhâyana, Vasishtha, Vishnu, &c.

III. LAW-BOOKS IN VERSE.
The Laws of Manu, Yāgñavalkya, &c.

IV. LATER BRAHMANISM.
The Bhagavad-gitâ.
The Vâyu-purâna.

V. BUDDHISM.
I. Pali Documents.
The Mahâparinibbâna Sutta, the Te ñga Sutta, the Mahasudassana Sutta, the Dhammaakkappavattana Sutta; the Suttanipâta; the Mahâvagga, the Kullavagga, and the Pâtimokkha.

II. Sanskrit Documents.
The Divyâvadâna and Saddharmapundarïka.

III. Chinese Documents.
The Phû-yâo King, or life of Buddha.

IV. Prakrit Gâïa Documents.
The Âkârânga Sûtra, Dasavaikâlika Sûtra, Sûtra-kritânga, and Uttarâdhyayana Sûtra.

VI. PÂRSI RELIGION.
I. Zend Documents.
The Vendîdâd.
2. Pehlevi and Parsi Documents.
The Bundahis, Bahman Yasht, Shâyast-lâ-shâyast, Dâdistâni Dînî, Mainyôî Khard.

VII. MOHAMMEDANISM.
The Koran.

VIII. CHINESE RELIGION.
1. Confucianism.
The Shû King, Shih King, Hsiâo King, Yi King, Lî Kî, Lun Yü, and Măng-ázè.

2. Tâoism.
The Tâo-teh King, Kwâng-ázè, and Kan Ying Phien.
TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS.

The system of transcribing Oriental words with Roman types, adopted by the translators of the Sacred Books of the East, is, on the whole, the same which I first laid down in my Proposals for a Missionary Alphabet, 1854, and which afterwards I shortly described in my Lectures on the Science of Language, Second Series, p. 169 (ninth edition). That system allows of great freedom in its application to different languages, and has, therefore, recommended itself to many scholars, even if they had long been accustomed to use their own system of transliteration.

It rests in fact on a few principles only, which may be applied to individual languages according to the views which each student has formed for himself of the character and the pronunciation of the vowels and consonants of any given alphabet.

It does not differ essentially from the Standard Alphabet proposed by Professor Lepsius. It only endeavours to realise, by means of the ordinary types which are found in every printing office, what my learned friend has been enabled to achieve, it may be in a more perfect manner, by means of a number of new types with diacritical marks, cast expressly for him by the Berlin Academy.

The general principles of what, on account of its easy application to all languages, I have called the Missionary Alphabet, are these:

1. No letters are to be used which do not exist in ordinary founts.
2. The same Roman type is always to represent the same foreign letter, and the same foreign letter is always to be represented by the same Roman type.

3. Simple letters are, as a rule, to be represented by simple, compound by compound types.

4. It is not attempted to indicate the pronunciation of foreign languages, but only to represent foreign letters by Roman types, leaving the pronunciation to be learnt, as it is now, from grammars or from conversation with natives.

5. The foundation of every system of transliteration must consist of a classification of the typical sounds of human speech. Such classification may be more or less perfect, more or less minute, according to the objects in view. For ordinary purposes the classification in vowels and consonants, and of consonants again in gutturals, dentals, and labials suffices. In these three classes we distinguish hard (not-voiced) and sonant (voiced) consonants, each being liable to aspiration; nasals, sibilants, and semivowels, some of these also, being either voiced or not-voiced.

6. After having settled the typical sounds, we assign to them, as much as possible, the ordinary Roman types of the first class.

7. We then arrange in every language which possesses a richer alphabet, all remaining letters, according to their affinities, as modifications of the nearest typical letters, or as letters of the second and third class. Thus linguals in Sanskrit are treated as nearest to dentals, palatales to gutturals.

8. The manner of expressing such modifications is uniform throughout. While all typical letters of [3]
the first class are expressed by Roman types, modified letters of the second class are expressed by italics, modified letters of the third class by small capitals. Only in extreme cases, where another class of modified types is wanted, are we compelled to have recourse either to diacritical marks, or to a different fount of types.

9. Which letters in each language are to be considered as primary, secondary, or tertiary may, to a certain extent, be left to the discretion of individual scholars.

10. As it has been found quite impossible to devise any practical alphabet that should accurately represent the pronunciation of words, the Missionary Alphabet, by not attempting to indicate minute shades of pronunciation, has at all events the advantage of not misleading readers in their pronunciation of foreign words. An italic \( t \), for instance, or a small capital \( T \), serves simply as a warning that this is not the ordinary \( t \), though it has some affinity with it. How it is to be pronounced must be learnt for each language, as it now is, from a grammar or otherwise. Thus \( t \) in Sanskrit is the lingual \( t \). How that is to be pronounced, we must learn from the Prātíṣākhyas, or from the mouth of a highly educated Srotriya. We shall then learn that its pronunciation is really that of what we call the ordinary dental \( t \), as in town, while the ordinary dental \( t \) in Sanskrit has a pronunciation of its own, extremely difficult to acquire for Europeans.

11. Words or sentences which used to be printed in italics are spaced.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Consonants</th>
<th>I Class</th>
<th>II Class</th>
<th>III Class</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gutturnales</td>
<td>1 I Nasali</td>
<td>12 Latinus</td>
<td>7 Spiritus Asper</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 Aspirata</td>
<td>17 Vulgatus</td>
<td>8 Latinus</td>
<td>6 Nasali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1 Media</td>
<td>16 Assuritae</td>
<td>9 Latinus</td>
<td>5 Cutturnales laudsiphilus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14 Assuritae</td>
<td>11 Assuritae</td>
<td>10 Latinus</td>
<td>4 Assuritae</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13 Tenites</td>
<td>13 Tenites</td>
<td>9 Latinus</td>
<td>3 Media Assuritae</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12 Latinus</td>
<td>12 Latinus</td>
<td>11 Latinus</td>
<td>2 Latinus</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.
| 18 | Semivocalis | y |
| 19 | Spiritus asper | (ŷ) |
| 20 | lenis | (ŷ) |
| 21 | asper assibilatus | s |
| 22 | lenis assibilatus | z |

Dentales.

| 23 | Tenuis | t |
| 24 | aspirata | th |
| 25 | assibilata | th |
| 26 | Media | d |
| 27 | aspirata | dh |
| 28 | assibilata | dh |
| 29 | Nasalis | n |
| 30 | Semivocalis | l |
| 31 | mollis 1 | l |
| 32 | mollis 2 | l |

Consonants (continued).

| 33 | Spiritus asper 1 | s |
| 34 | asper 2 | s (ʃ) |
| 35 | lenis | z |
| 36 | asperrimus 1 | z (ʒ) |
| 37 | asperrimus 2 | z (ʒ) |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(linguales, &amp;c.)</th>
<th>Tenuis</th>
<th>Media</th>
<th>Nasalis</th>
<th>Semi-vocais</th>
<th>Fricata</th>
<th>Fricata</th>
<th>Labiales</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>38</td>
<td><img src="image1" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image2" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image3" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image4" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image5" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image6" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image7" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39</td>
<td><img src="image8" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image9" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image10" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image11" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image12" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image13" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image14" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40</td>
<td><img src="image15" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image16" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image17" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image18" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image19" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image20" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image21" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>41</td>
<td><img src="image22" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image23" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image24" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image25" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image26" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image27" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image28" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>42</td>
<td><img src="image29" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image30" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image31" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image32" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image33" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image34" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image35" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>43</td>
<td><img src="image36" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image37" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image38" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image39" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image40" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image41" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image42" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>44</td>
<td><img src="image43" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image44" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image45" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image46" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image47" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image48" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image49" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>45</td>
<td><img src="image50" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image51" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image52" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image53" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image54" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image55" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image56" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>46</td>
<td><img src="image57" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image58" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image59" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image60" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image61" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image62" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image63" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>47</td>
<td><img src="image64" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image65" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image66" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image67" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image68" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image69" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image70" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>48</td>
<td><img src="image71" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image72" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image73" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image74" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image75" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image76" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image77" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>49</td>
<td><img src="image78" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image79" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image80" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image81" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image82" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image83" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image84" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50</td>
<td><img src="image85" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image86" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image87" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image88" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image89" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image90" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image91" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>51</td>
<td><img src="image92" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image93" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image94" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image95" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image96" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image97" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image98" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>52</td>
<td><img src="image99" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image100" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image101" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image102" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image103" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image104" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image105" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>53</td>
<td><img src="image106" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image107" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image108" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image109" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image110" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image111" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image112" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>54</td>
<td><img src="image113" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image114" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image115" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image116" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image117" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image118" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image119" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55</td>
<td><img src="image120" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image121" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image122" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image123" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image124" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image125" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image126" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>56</td>
<td><img src="image127" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image128" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image129" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image130" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image131" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image132" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image133" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>57</td>
<td><img src="image134" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image135" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image136" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image137" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image138" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image139" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image140" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>58</td>
<td><img src="image141" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image142" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image143" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image144" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image145" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image146" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image147" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>59</td>
<td><img src="image148" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image149" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image150" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image151" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image152" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image153" alt="Image" /></td>
<td><img src="image154" alt="Image" /></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>I Class.</td>
<td>II Class.</td>
<td>III Class.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>---</td>
<td>----------</td>
<td>----------</td>
<td>------------</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>Neutralis</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Laryngo-palatalis</td>
<td>e</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>labialis</td>
<td>o</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Gutturalis brevis</td>
<td>a</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td>à (a)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>Palatalis brevis</td>
<td>i</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td>î (i)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Dentalis brevis</td>
<td>î</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Lingualis brevis</td>
<td>ri</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Labialis brevis</td>
<td>u</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td>û (u)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Gutturo-palatalis brevis</td>
<td>e</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td>ê (ai) (e)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>Diphthongus guttur-palatalis</td>
<td>âi (ai)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>ei (êi)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>oi (ôu)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>Gutturo-labialis brevis</td>
<td>o</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>longa</td>
<td>ô (au) (o)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Diphthongus gutturo-labialis</td>
<td>âu (au)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>eu (êu)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>ou (ôu)</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Gutturalis fracta</td>
<td>â</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Palatalis fracta</td>
<td>i</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Labialis fracta</td>
<td>ü</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Approximate Pronunciation of the Roman Letters as Representing the Sanskrit Alphabet.

Vowels.

\begin{tabular}{ll}
\textit{a} & \\
\textit{a} & \textit{a} as in sam \\
\textit{i} & \textit{i} as in sin \\
\textit{ri} & \textit{ri} as in fire \\
\textit{li} & \textit{li} as in lie \\
\textit{u} & \textit{u} as in full \\ \textit{ai} & \textit{ai} as in aisle \\
\textit{o} & \textit{o} as in note \\
\textit{au} & \textit{au} as in proud \\ \end{tabular}

\begin{tabular}{ll}
\textit{ñ} & \textit{n} as in new \\ \textit{y} & \textit{y} as in yet \\
\textit{s} & \textit{s} as in sharp \\
\textit{t} & \textit{n} as in tin (tip of tongue striking) \\
\textit{th} & \textit{th} as in then (the bone of the teeth) \\
\textit{d} & \textit{d} as in din \\
\textit{dh} & \textit{dh} as in landholder \\
\textit{n} & \textit{n} as in nay \\ \textit{l} & \textit{l} as in let \\ \textit{s} & \textit{s} as in grass \\
\textit{t} & \textit{t} as in town (tip of tongue striking) \\
\textit{th} & \textit{th} as in outhouse \\
\textit{d} & \textit{d} as in done \\
\textit{dh} & \textit{dh} as in rodhook \\
\textit{n} & \textit{n} as in no \\
\textit{r} & \textit{r} as in red \\
\textit{sh} & \textit{sh} as in shun \\
\textit{p} & \textit{p} as in pan \\
\textit{ph} & \textit{ph} as in topheavy \\
\textit{b} & \textit{b} as in bed \\
\textit{bh} & \textit{bh} as in clubhouse \\
\textit{m} & \textit{m} as in mill \\
\textit{v} & \textit{v} as in live \\
\textit{m} & \textit{m} as in Anusvāra (slight nasal) \\
\textit{h} & \textit{h} as in Visarga (slight breathing) \\
\end{tabular}

Proper names have frequently been left in their ordinary spelling, e.g. Rājendra, instead of Rāgendra. In words which have almost become English, the diacritical marks have often been omitted, e.g. Rig-veda, instead of Ṛig-veda; Brahman, instead of Brāhmaṇa; Confucius, Zoroaster, Koran, &c.
INTRODUCTION

TO

THE UPANISHADS.

FIRST TRANSLATION OF THE UPANISHADS.
DĀRĀ SHUKOH, ANQUETIL DUPERRON, SCHOPENHAUER.

The ancient Vedic literature, the foundation of the whole literature of India, which has been handed down in that country in an unbroken succession from the earliest times within the recollection of man to the present day, became known for the first time beyond the frontiers of India through the Upanishads. The Upanishads were translated from Sanskrit into Persian by, or, it may be, for Dārā Shukoh, the eldest son of Shāh Jehān, an enlightened prince, who openly professed the liberal religious tenets of the great Emperor Akbar, and even wrote a book intended to reconcile the religious doctrines of Hindus and Mohammedans. He seems first to have heard of the Upanishads during his stay in Kashmir in 1640. He afterwards invited several Pandits from Benares to Delhi, who were to assist him in the work of translation. The translation was finished in 1657. Three years after the accomplishment of this work, in 1659, the prince was put to death by his brother Aurangzib, in reality, no doubt, because he was the eldest son and legitimate successor of Shāh Jehān, but under the pretext that he was an infidel, and dangerous to the established religion of the empire.

When the Upanishads had once been translated from Sanskrit into Persian, at that time the most widely read language of the East and understood likewise by many European scholars, they became generally accessible to all who took an interest in the religious literature of India. It is true that under Akbar’s reign (1556–1586) similar translations had been prepared, but neither those nor the translations of Dārā Shukoh attracted the attention of European scholars till the year 1775. In that year Anquetil Duperron, the famous traveller and discoverer of the Zend-avesta, received one MS. of the Persian translation of the Upanishads, sent to him by M. Gentil, the French resident at the court of Shuja ud daula, and brought to France by M. Bernier. After receiving another MS., Anquetil Duperron collated the two, and translated the Persian translation into French (not published), and into Latin. That Latin translation was published in 1801 and 1802, under the title of ‘Oupnek’hat, id est, Secretum tegendum: opus ipsa in India rarissimum, continens antiquam et arcanam, seu theologicam et philosophicam doctrinam, e quatuor sacris Indorum libris Rak baid, Djedjer baid, Sam baid, Aθhrban baid excerptam; ad verbum, e Persico idiomate, Samskreticis vocabulis intermixto, in Latinum conversum: Dissertationibus et Annotationibus difficiliora explanantibus, illustratum: studio et opera Anquetil Duperron, Indicopleustae. Argentorati, typis et impensis fratrum Levrault, vol. i, 1801; vol. ii, 1802.

1 Elphinstone, History of India, ed. Cowell, p. 610.

This translation, though it attracted considerable interest among scholars, was written in so utterly unintelligible a style, that it required the lynxlike perspicacity of an intre-

1 M. M., Introduction to the Science of Religion, p. 79.
2 Several other MSS. of this translation have since come to light; one at Oxford, Codices Wilsoniani, 399 and 400. Anquetil Duperron gives the following title of the Persian translation: ‘Hanc interpretationem ṭōv Oupnek Kathryn quorumvis quatuor librorum Beid, quod, designatum cum secreto magno (per secretum magnum) est, et integrum cognitionem luminis luminum, hic Fakir sine tristitia (Sultan) Mohammed Dara Schakoh ipse, cum significatio recta, cum sinceritate, in tempore sex mensium (postremo die, secundo ṭōv Schonbeh, vigesimo) sexto mensis ṭōv Ramazzan, anno 1067 ṭōv Hedjri (Christi, 1657) in urbe Delhi, in mansione nakhenoudéh, cum absoluto ad finem fecit pervenire.’ The MS. was copied by Ṭāma Ram in the year 1767 A.D. Anquetil Duperron adds: ‘Absolutum est hoc Apographum versionis Latinae ṭōv quinqueaginta Oupnekatha, ad verbum, e Persico idiomate, Samskreticis vocabulis intermixto, factæ, die 9 Octobris, 1796, 18 Brumaire, anni 4, Reipublic. Gall. Parisii.’
INTRODUCTION.

pid philosopher, such as Schopenhauer, to discover a thread through such a labyrinth. Schopenhauer, however, not only found and followed such a thread, but he had the courage to proclaim to an incredulous age the vast treasures of thought which were lying buried beneath that fearful jargon.

As Anquetil Duperron's volumes have become scarce, I shall here give a short specimen of his translation, which corresponds to the first sentences of my translation of the Kēndogya-upanishad (p. 1):—'Oum hoc verbum (esse) adikit ut sciveris, sic τὸ μασχγουλί fac (de eo meditare), quod ipsum hoc verbum aodkit est; propter illud quod hoc (verbum) ous, in Sam Beid, cum voce alta, cum harmoniā pronunciātum fiat.

'Adkiteh porro cremor (optimum, selectissimum) est: quemadmodum ex (præ) omni quieto (non moto), et moto, pulvis (terra) cremor (optimum) est; et e (præ) terra aqua cremor est; et ex aqua, comedendum (victus) cremor est; (et) e comedendo, comedens cremor est; et e comedente, loquela (id quod dicitur) cremor est; et e loquela, aët τὸ Beid, et ex aët, τὸ siam, id est, cum harmoniā (pronunciātum); et e Sam, τὸ adkit, cremor est; id est, ous, voce alta, cum harmonia pronunciare, aokit, cremor cremorum (optimum optimorum) est. Major, ex (præ) adkit, cremor alter non est.'

Schopenhauer not only read this translation carefully, but he makes no secret of it, that his own philosophy is powerfully impregnated by the fundamental doctrines of the Upanishads. He dwells on it again and again, and it seems both fair to Schopenhauer's memory and highly important for a true appreciation of the philosophical value of the Upanishads, to put together what that vigorous thinker has written on those ancient rhapsodies of truth.

In his 'Welt als Wille und Vorstellung,' he writes, in the preface to the first edition, p. xiii:

'If the reader has also received the benefit of the Vedas, the access to which by means of the Upanishads is in my eyes the greatest privilege which this still young century (1818) may claim before all previous centuries, (for I anticipate that the influence of Sanskrit literature will not be less profound than the revival of Greek in the fourteenth century,)—if then the reader, I say, has received his initiation in primeval Indian wisdom, and received it with an open heart, he will be prepared in the very best way for hearing what I have to tell him. It will not sound to him strange, as to many others, much less disagreeable; for I might, if it did not sound conceited, contend that every one of the detached statements which constitute the Upanishads, may be deduced as a necessary result from the fundamental thoughts which I have to enunciate, though those deductions themselves are by no means to be found there.'

And again 1:

'If I consider how difficult it is, even with the assistance of the best and carefully educated teachers, and with all the excellent philological appliances collected in the course of this century, to arrive at a really correct, accurate, and living understanding of Greek and Roman authors, whose language was after all the language of our own predecessors in Europe, and the mother of our own, while Sanskrit, on the contrary, was spoken thousands of years ago in distant India, and can be learnt only with appliances which are as yet very imperfect;—if I add to this the impression which the translations of Sanskrit works by European scholars, with very few exceptions, produce on my mind, I cannot resist a certain suspicion that our Sanskrit scholars do not understand their texts much better than the higher class of schoolboys their Greek. Of course, as they are not boys, but men of knowledge and understanding, they put together, out of what they do understand, something like what the general meaning may have been, but much probably creeps in ex ingenio. It is still worse with the Chinese of our European Sinologues.

'If then I consider, on the other hand, that Sultan Mohammed Dārā Shukoh, the brother of Aurangzib, was born and bred in India, was a learned, thoughtful, and enquiring man, and therefore probably understood his Sanskrit about as well as we our Latin, that moreover he was assisted by a number of the most learned Pandits, all this together gives me at once a very high opinion of his translation of the Vedic Upanishads into Persian. If, besides this, I see with what profound and quite appropriate reverence Anquetil Duperron has treated that Persian translation, rendering it in Latin word by word, retaining, in spite of Latin grammar, the Persian syntax, and all the Sanskrit words which the Sultan himself had left untranslated, though explaining them in a glossary, I feel the most perfect confidence in reading that translation, and that confidence soon receives its most perfect justification. For how entirely does the Oupnekhat breathe throughout the holy spirit of the Vedas! How is everyone who by a diligent study of its Persian Latin has become familiar with that incomparable book, stirred by that spirit to the very depth of his soul! How does every line display its firm, definite, and throughout harmonious meaning! From every sentence deep, original, and sublime thoughts arise, and the whole is pervaded by a high and holy and earnest spirit. Indian air surrounds us, and original thoughts of kindred spirits. And oh, how thoroughly is the mind here washed clean of all early engrafted Jewish superstitions, and of all philosophy that cringes before those superstitions! In the whole world there is no study, except that of the originals, so beneficial and so elevating as that of the Oupnekhat. It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death!

Though I feel the highest regard for the religious and philosophical works of Sanskrit literature, I have not been able to derive much pleasure from their poetical compositions. Nay, they seem to me sometimes as tasteless and monstrous as the sculpture of India.

In most of the pagan philosophical writers of the first Christian centuries we see the Jewish theism, which, as Christianity, was soon to become the faith of the people, shining through, much as at present we may perceive shining through in the writings of the learned, the native

---

1 Loc. cit. II, pp. 425
pantheism of India, which is destined sooner or later to become the faith of the people. Ex oriente lux.

This may seem strong language, and, in some respects, too strong. But I thought it right to quote it here, because, whatever may be urged against Schopenhauer, he was a thoroughly honest thinker and honest speaker, and no one would suspect him of any predilection for what has been so readily called Indian mysticism. That Schelling and his school should use rapturous language about the Upanishads, might carry little weight with that large class of philosophers by whom everything beyond the clouds of their own horizon is labelled mysticism. But that Schopenhauer should have spoken of the Upanishads as 'products of the highest wisdom' (Ausgeburt der höchsten Weisheit), that he should have placed the pantheism there taught high above the pantheism of Bruno, Malebranche, Spinoza, and Scotus Erigena, as brought to light again at Oxford in 1681, may perhaps secure a more considerate reception for these relics of ancient wisdom than anything that I could say in their favour.

Rammohun Roy.

Greater, however, than the influence exercised on the philosophical thought of modern Europe, has been the impulse which these same Upanishads have imparted to the religious life of modern India. In about the same year (1774 or 1775) when the first MS. of the Persian translation of the Upanishads was received by Anquetil Duperron, Rammohun Roy was born in India, the reformer and reviver of the ancient religion of the Brahmans. A man who in his youth could write a book 'Against the Idolatry of all Religions,' and who afterwards expressed in so many exact words his 'belief in the divine authority of Christ,' was not likely to retain anything of the sacred literature of his own religion, unless he had perceived in it the same

---

1 Loc. cit. II, p. 428.
2 Loc. cit. I, p. 6. These passages were pointed out to me by Professor Noiré.
3 Born 1774, died at 2.30 A.M., on Friday, 28th September, 1833.
4 Last Days of Rammohun Roy, by Mary Carpenter, 1866, p. 135.
INTRODUCTION.

divine authority which he recognised in the teaching of Christ. He rejected the Purānas, he would not have been swayed in his convictions by the authority of the Laws of Manu, or even by the sacredness of the Vedas. He was above all that. But he discovered in the Upanishads and in the so-called Vedānta something different from all the rest, something that ought not to be thrown away, something that, if rightly understood, might supply the right native soil in which alone the seeds of true religion, aye, of true Christianity, might spring up again and prosper in India, as they had once sprung up and prospered from out the philosophies of Origen or Synesius. European scholars have often wondered that Rammohun Roy, in his defence of the Veda, should have put aside the Samhitās and the Brāhmaṇas, and laid his finger on the Upanishads only, as the true kernel of the whole Veda. Historically, no doubt, he was wrong, for the Upanishads presuppose both the hymns and the liturgical books of the Veda. But as the ancient philosophers distinguished in the Veda between the Karma-kāṇḍa and the Gñāna-kāṇḍa, between works and knowledge; as they themselves pointed to the learning of the sacred hymns and the performance of sacrifices as a preparation only for that enlightenment which was reserved as the highest reward for the faithful performance of all previous duties, Rammohun Roy, like Buddha and other enlightened men before him, perceived that the time for insisting on all that previous discipline with its minute prescriptions and superstitious observances was gone, while the knowledge conveyed in the Upanishads or the Vedānta, enveloped though it may be in strange coverings, should henceforth form the foundation of a new religious life. He would tolerate nothing idolatrous, not even in his mother, poor woman, who after joining his most bitter opponents, confessed to her son, before she set out on her

1 M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 319.
2 "The adoration of the invisible Supreme Being is exclusively prescribed by the Upanishads or the principal parts of the Vedas and also by the Vedant." Rammohun Roy, Translation of the Kena-upanishad, Calcutta, 1816, p. 6. M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 320.
last pilgrimage to Juggernaut, where she died, that 'he was right, but that she was a weak woman, and grown too old to give up the observances which were a comfort to her.' It was not therefore from any regard of their antiquity or their sacred character that Rammohun Roy clung to the Upanishads, that he translated them into Bengali, Hindi, and English, and published them at his own expense. It was because he recognised in them seeds of eternal truth, and was bold enough to distinguish between what was essential in them and what was not,—a distinction, as he often remarked with great perplexity, which Christian teachers seemed either unable or unwilling to make.1

The death of that really great and good man during his stay in England in 1833, was one of the severest blows that have fallen on the prospects of India. But his work has not been in vain. Like a tree whose first shoot has been killed by one winter frost, it has broken out again in a number of new and more vigorous shoots, for whatever the outward differences may be between the Adi Brahmo Samāj of Debendranath Tagore, or the Brahmo Samāj of India of Keshub Chunder Sen, or the Sadharan Brahmo Samāj, the common root of them all is the work done, once for all, by Rammohun Roy. That work may have disappeared from sight for a time, and its present manifestations may seem to many observers who are too near, not very promising. But in one form or another, under one name or another, I feel convinced that work will live. 'In India,' Schopenhauer writes, 'our religion will now and never strike root: the primitive wisdom of the human race will never be pushed aside there by the events of Galilee. On the contrary, Indian wisdom will flow back upon Europe, and produce a thorough change in our knowing and thinking.' Here, again, the great philosopher seems to me to have allowed himself to be carried away too far by his enthusiasm for the less known. He is blind for the dark sides of the Upanishads, and he wilfully shuts his eyes against the bright rays of eternal truth in the Gospels, which even

1 Last Days, p. 11.
Rammohun Roy was quick enough to perceive behind the mists and clouds of tradition that gather so quickly round the sunrise of every religion.

POSITION OF THE UPAISHADS IN VEDIC LITERATURE.

If now we ask what has been thought of the Upanishads by Sanskrit scholars or by Oriental scholars in general, it must be confessed that hitherto they have not received at their hands that treatment which in the eyes of philosophers and theologians they seem so fully to deserve. When the first enthusiasm for such works as Sakuntalā and Gita-Govinda had somewhat subsided, and Sanskrit scholars had recognised that a truly scholarlike study of Indian literature must begin with the beginning, the exclusively historical interest prevailed to so large an extent that the hymns of the Veda, the Brāhma/nas, and the Sūtras absorbed all interest, while the Upanishads were put aside for a time as of doubtful antiquity, and therefore of minor importance.

My real love for Sanskrit literature was first kindled by the Upanishads. It was in the year 1844, when attending Schelling’s lectures at Berlin, that my attention was drawn to those ancient theosophic treatises, and I still possess my collations of the Sanskrit MSS. which had then just arrived at Berlin, the Chambers collection, and my copies of commentaries, and commentaries on commentaries, which I made at that time. Some of my translations which I left with Schelling, I have never been able to recover, though to judge from others which I still possess, the loss of them is of small consequence. Soon after leaving Berlin, when continuing my Sanskrit studies at Paris under Burnouf, I put aside the Upanishads, convinced that for a true appreciation of them it was necessary to study, first of all, the earlier periods of Vedic literature, as represented by the hymns and the Brāhma/nas of the Vedas.

In returning, after more than thirty years, to these favourite studies, I find that my interest in them, though it has changed in character, has by no means diminished.

[3]
It is true, no doubt, that the stratum of literature which contains the Upanishads is later than the Samhitās, and later than the Brāhmaṇas, but the first germs of Upanishad doctrines go back at least as far as the Mantra period, which provisionally has been fixed between 1000 and 800 B.C. Conceptions corresponding to the general teaching of the Upanishads occur in certain hymns of the Rig-veda-samhitā, they must have existed therefore before that collection was finally closed. One hymn in the Samhitā of the Rig-veda (I, 191) was designated by Kātyāyana, the author of the Sarvāṇukramavīka, as an Upanishad. Here, however, upanishad means rather a secret charm than a philosophical doctrine. Verses of the hymns have often been incorporated in the Upanishads, and among the Oupnekhats translated into Persian by Dārā Shukoh we actually find the Purusha-sūkta, the 90th hymn of the tenth book of the Rig-veda, forming the greater portion of the Bark'heh Soukt. In the Samhitā of the Yagur-veda, however, in the Vāgasaneyisākhā, we meet with a real Upanishad, the famous Isa or Īsāvāsyā-upanishad, while the Sivasamkalpa, too, forms part of its thirty-fourth book. In the Brāhmaṇas several Upanishads occur, even in portions which are not classed as Āranyakas, as, for instance, the well-known Kena or Tala-vakāra-upanishad. The recognised place, however, for the ancient Upanishads is in the Āranyakas, or forest-books, which, as a rule, form an appendix to the Brāhmaṇas, but are sometimes included also under the general name of Brāhmaṇa. Brāhmaṇa, in fact, meaning originally the sayings of Brahmans, whether in the general sense of priests, or in the more special of Brahman-priest, is a name applicable not only to the books, properly so called, but to all old prose traditions, whether contained in the Samhitās, such as the Taittiriyasamhitā, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āranyakas, the Upanishads, and even, in certain cases, in the Sūtras. We shall see in the introduction to the Aitareya-āranyaka, that that Āranyaka is in the beginning a Brâhmâna, a mere continuation of the Aitareya-brâhmana, explaining the Mahâvrata ceremony, while its last book contains the Sûtras or short technical rules explaining the same ceremony which in the first book had been treated in the style peculiar to the Brâhmânas. In the same Aitareya-âranyaka, III, 2, 6, 6, a passage of the Upanishad is spoken of as a Brâhmâna, possibly as something like a Brâhmâna, while something very like an Upanishad occurs in the Âpastamba-sûtras, and might be quoted therefore as a Sûtra. At all events the Upanishads, like the Âranyakas, belong to what Hindu theologians call Sruti, or revealed literature, in opposition to Smṛiti, or traditional literature, which is supposed to be founded on the former, and allowed to claim a secondary authority only; and the earliest of these philosophical treatises will always, I believe, maintain a place in the literature of the world, among the most astounding productions of the human mind in any age and in any country.

---

1 See Weber, Indische Studien, IX, p. 1 seq.

Different Classes of Upanishads.

The ancient Upanishads, i.e. those which occupy a place in the Samhítás, Brâhmanas, and Âranyakas, must be, if we follow the chronology which at present is commonly, though, it may be, provisionally only, received by Sanskrit scholars, older than 600 B.C., i.e. anterior to the rise of Buddhism. As to other Upanishads, and their number is very large, which either stand by themselves, or which are ascribed to the Atharva-veda, it is extremely difficult to fix their age. Some of them are, no doubt, quite modern, for mention is made even of an Allah-úpanishad; but others may claim a far higher antiquity than is generally assigned to them on internal evidence. I shall only mention that the name of Atharva-sîras, an Upanishad generally assigned to a very modern date, is quoted in the Sûtras of Gautama and Baudhâyana; that the Svetâsvatara-upanishad, or the Svetâsvatârânâm Mantropanishad, though bearing many notes of later periods of thought, is quoted by Saṅkara in his commentary on the Vedânta-sūtras; while the Nrisimhottaratâpaniya-upanishad forms part of the twelve Upanishads explained by Vidyârânya in his Sarvopanishad-arthânubhûti-prakâsa. The Upanishads comprehended in that work are:

1. Aitareya-upanishad.
2. Taittiriya-upanishad.
5. Prasna-upanishad.
7. Maitrâyanîya-upanishad.
11. Talavakâra (Kena)-upanishad.
12. Nrisimhottaratâpaniya-upanishad

The number of Upanishads translated by Dârâ Shukoh amounts to 50; their number, as given in the Mahâvâkyamuktâvali and in the Muktikâ-upanishad, is 108. Professor Weber thinks that their number, so far as we know at present, may be reckoned at 235. In order, however, to arrive at so high a number, every title of an Upanishad would have to be counted separately, while in several cases it is clearly the same Upanishad which is quoted under different names. In an alphabetical list which I published in 1865 (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft XIX, 137-158), the number of real Upanishads reached 149. To that number Dr. Burnell in his Catalogue

---

1 Vedânta-sūtras I, 1, 11.
2 One misses the Íśâ or Íśavasya-upanishad in this list. The Upanishads chiefly studied in Bengal are the Brihad-âranyaka, Aitareya, Khândogya, Taittiriya, Íśâ, Kena, Kâṭha, Prasna, Mundaka, and Mândûkya, to which should be added the Svetâsvatara. M.M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 325.
3 Dr. Burnell thinks that this is an artificial computation, 108 being a sacred number in Southern India. See Kielhorn in Gough's Papers on Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 193.
5 Indian Antiquary, II, 267.
INTRODUCTION.

(p. 59) added 5, Professor Haug (Brahma und die Brahmāmanen) 16, making a sum total of 170. New names, however, are constantly being added in the catalogues of MSS. published by Bühler, Kielhorn, Burnell, Rajendralal Mitra, and others, and I shall reserve therefore a more complete list of Upanishads for a later volume.

Though it is easy to see that these Upanishads belong to very different periods of Indian thought, any attempt to fix their relative age seems to me for the present almost hopeless. No one can doubt that the Upanishads which have had a place assigned to them in the Sāhitas, Brāhmaṇas, and Āranyakas are the oldest. Next to these we can draw a line to include the Upanishads clearly referred to in the Vedānta-sūtras, or explained and quoted by Saṅkara, by Sāyana, and other more modern commentators. We can distinguish Upanishads in prose from Upanishads in mixed prose and verse, and again Upanishads in archaic verse from Upanishads in regular and continuous Anushṭubh Slokas. We can also class them according to their subjects, and, at last, according to the sects to which they belong. But beyond this it is hardly safe to venture at present. Attempts have been made by Professor Weber and M. Regnaud to fix in each class the relative age of certain Upanishads, and I do not deny to their arguments, even where they conflict with each other, considerable weight in forming a preliminary judgment. But I know of hardly any argument which is really convincing, or which could not be met by counter arguments equally strong. Simplicity may be a sign of antiquity, but it is not so always, for what seems simple, may be the result of abbreviation. One Upanishad may give the correct, another an evidently corrupt reading, yet it does not follow that the correct reading may not be the result of an emendation. It is quite clear that a large mass of traditional Upanishads must have existed before they assumed their present form. Where two or three or four Upanishads contain the same story, told almost in the same words, they are not always copied from one another, but they have been settled independently, in different localities, by different teachers, it may be, for different purposes.
Lastly, the influence of Sâkhâs or schools may have told more or less on certain Upanishads. Thus the Maitrâyâniya-upanishad, as we now possess it, shows a number of irregular forms which even the commentator can account for only as peculiarities of the Maitrâyâniya-sâkhâ 1. That Upanishad, as it has come down to us, is full of what we should call clear indications of a modern and corrupt age. It contains in VI, 37, a sloka from the Mânava-dharma-sâstra, which startled even the commentator, but is explained away by him as possibly found in another Sâkhâ, and borrowed from there by Manu. It contains corruptions of easy words which one would have thought must have been familiar to every student. Thus instead of the passage as found in the Khân-dogya-upanishad VIII, 7, 1, ya âtmâpahatapâpmâ vigaro vimrîtyur visoko 'vigighatso 'pipâsaḥ, &c., the text of the Maitrâyâniya-upanishad (VII, 7) reads, âtmâpahatapâpmâ vigaro vimrîtyur visoko 'vikikitso 'vipâsaḥ. But here again the commentator explains that another Sâkhâ reads 'vigighatsa, and that avipâsa is to be explained by means of a change of letters as apipâsa. Corruptions, therefore, or modern elements which are found in one Upanishad, as handed down in one Sâkhâ, do not prove that the same existed in other Sâkhâs, or that they were found in the original text.

All these questions have to be taken into account before we can venture to give a final judgment on the relative age of Upanishads which belong to one and the same class. I know of no problem which offers so many similarities with the one before us as that of the relative age of the four Gospels. All the difficulties which occur in the Upanishads occur here, and no critical student who knows the difficulties that have to be encountered in determining the relative age of the four Gospels, will feel inclined, in the present state of Vedic scholarship, to speak with confidence on the relative age of the ancient Upanishads.

1 They are generally explained as khândasa, but in one place (Maitr. Up. II, 4) the commentator treats such irregularities as etâkhâkhâsâhketapâhah, a reading peculiar to the Maitrâyâniya school. Some learned remarks on this point may be seen in an article by Dr. L. Schroeder, Über die Maitrâyaṇi Samhitâ.

With regard to a critical restoration of the text of the Upanishads, I have but seldom relied on the authority of new MSS., but have endeavoured throughout to follow that text which is presupposed by the commentaries, whether they are the work of the old Saṅkarākārya, or of the more modern Saṅkarānanda, or Sāyana, or others. Though there still prevails some uncertainty as to the date of Saṅkarākārya, commonly assigned to the eighth century A.D., yet I doubt whether any MSS. of the Upanishads could now be found prior to 1600 A.D. The text, therefore, which Saṅkara had before his eyes, or, it may be, his ears, commands, I think, a higher authority than that of any MSS. likely to be recovered at present.

It may be objected that Saṅkara’s text belonged to one locality only, and that different readings and different recensions may have existed in other parts of India. That is perfectly true. We possess various recensions of several Upanishads, as handed down in different Sākhās of different Vedas, and we know of various readings recorded by the commentators. These, where they are of importance for our purposes, have been carefully taken into account.

It has also been supposed that Saṅkara, who, in writing his commentaries on the Upanishad, was chiefly guided by philosophical considerations, his chief object being to use the Upanishads as a sacred foundation for the Vedānta philosophy, may now and then have taken liberties with the text. That may be so, but no stringent proof of it has as yet been brought forward, and I therefore hold that when we succeed in establishing throughout that text which served as the basis of Saṅkara’s commentaries, we have done enough for the present, and have fulfilled at all events the first and indispensable task in a critical treatment of the text of the Upanishads.

But in the same manner as it is easy to see that the text of the Rig-veda, which is presupposed by Sáyana’s commentary and even by earlier works, is in many places palpably corrupt, we cannot resist the same conviction with regard to the text of the Upanishads. In some cases the metre, in others grammar, in others again the collation of analogous passages enable us to detect errors, and probably very ancient errors, that had crept into the text long before Saṅkara composed his commentaries.

Some questions connected with the metres of the Upanishads have been very learnedly treated by Professor Gilde-meister in his essay, ‘Zur Theorie des Sloka.’ The lesson to be derived from that essay, and from a study of the Upanishads, is certainly to abstain for the present from conjectural emendations. In the old Upanishads the same metrical freedom prevails as in the hymns; in the later Upanishads, much may be tolerated as the result of conscious or unconscious imitation. The metrical emendations that suggest themselves are generally so easy and so obvious that, for that very reason, we should hesitate before correcting what native scholars would have corrected long ago, if they had thought that there was any real necessity for correction.

It is easy to suggest, for instance, that in the Vāgasaneyi-samhitā-upanishad, verse 5, instead of tad antar asya sarvasya tadusarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ, the original text may have been tad antar asya sarvasya tu darsaṃvātāyaḥ; yet Saṅkara evidently read sarvasyāsya, and as the same reading is found in the text of the Vāgasaneyi-samhitā, who would venture to correct so old a mistake?

Again, if in verse 8, we left out yāthātathayaḥ, we should get a much more regular metre,

Kavir maniṣhi pariḥbhūḥ svyamabhūḥ ārthān vyādādhāḥ kāśvātibhyāḥ śāmābhyāḥ.

Here vyādā forms one syllable by what I have proposed to call synizesis¹, which is allowed in the Upanishads as well as in the hymns. All would then seem right, except that it is difficult to explain how so rare a word as yâthâtathyata/ could have been introduced into the text.

In verse 10 one feels tempted to propose the omission of eva in anyad àhur avidyayá, while in verse 11, an eva inserted after vidyám ka would certainly improve the metre.

In verse 15 the expression satyadharmáya drîshṭaye is archaic, but perfectly legitimate in the sense of 'that we may see the nature of the True,' or 'that we see him whose nature is true.' When this verse is repeated in the Maitr. Up. VI, 35, we find instead, satyadharmáya vishnave, 'for the true Vishnu.' But here, again, no sound critic would venture to correct a mistake, intentional or unintentional, which is sanctioned both by the MSS. of the text and by the commentary.

Such instances, where every reader feels tempted at once to correct the textus receptus, occur again and again, and when they seem of any interest they have been mentioned in the notes. It may happen, however, that the correction, though at first sight plausible, has to be surrendered on more mature consideration. Thus in the Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad, verse 2, one feels certainly inclined to write evam tve nânyatheto 'sti, instead of evam tvayi nânyatheto 'sti. But tve, if it were used here, would probably itself have to be pronounced dissyllabically, while tvayi, though it never occurs in the Rig-veda, may well keep its place here, in the last book of the Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ, provided we pronounce it by synizesis, i.e. as one syllable.

Attempts have been made sometimes to go beyond Sañkara, and to restore the text, as it ought to have been originally, but as it was no longer in Sañkara's time. It is one thing to decline to follow Sañkara in every one of his interpretations, it is quite another to decline to accept the text which he interprets. The former is inevitable, the latter is always very precarious.

Thus I see, for instance, that M. Regnaud, in the Errata to the second volume of his excellent work on the Upani-shads (Matiéraux pour servir à l'histoire de la philosophie de l'Inde, 1878) proposes to read in the Brhad-âranyaka-upanishad IV, 3, 1-8, sam anena vadishya iti, instead of sāmene na vadishya iti. Saṅkara adopted the latter reading, and explained accordingly, that Yāgñavalkya went to king Ganaka, but made up his mind not to speak. M. Regnaud, reading sam anena vadishya iti, takes the very opposite view, namely, that Yāgñavalkya went to king Ganaka, having made up his mind to have a conversation with him. As M. Regnaud does not rest this emendation on the authority of any new MSS., we may examine it as an ingenious conjecture; but in that case it seems to me clear that, if we adopted it, we should have at the same time to omit the whole sentence which follows. Saṅkara saw clearly that what had to be accounted or explained was why the king should address the Brahman first, samrād eva pūrvam papraḥkha; whereas if Yāgñavalkya had come with the intention of having a conversation with the king, he, the Brahman, should have spoken first. This irregularity is explained by the intervening sentence, in which we are reminded that on a former occasion, when Ganaka and Yāgñavalkya had a disputation on the Agnihotra, Yāgñavalkya granted Ganaka a boon to choose, and he chose as his boon the right of asking questions according to his pleasure. Having received that boon, Ganaka was at liberty to question Yāgñavalkya, even though he did not like it, and hence Ganaka is introduced here as the first to ask a question.

All this hangs well together, while if we assume that Yāgñavalkya came for the purpose of having a conversation with Ganaka, the whole sentence from 'atha ha yag ganakas ka' to 'pūrvam papraḥkha' would be useless, nor would there be any excuse for Ganaka beginning the conversation, when Yāgñavalkya came himself on purpose to question him.

It is necessary, even when we feel obliged to reject an interpretation of Saṅkara's, without at the same time altering the text, to remember that Saṅkara, where he is not blinded by philosophical predilections, commands the highest respect as an interpreter. I cannot help thinking therefore that M. Regnaud (vol. i, p. 59) was right in translating the passage in the Khanda Up. V, 3, 7, tasmād u sarveshu lokeshu kshattrasyaiva prāśanam abhūt, by 'que le kshatriya seul l'a enseignée dans tous les mondes.' For when he proposes in the 'Errata' to translate instead, 'c'est pourquoi l'empire dans tous les mondes fut attribué au kshatriya seulement,' he forgets that such an idea is foreign to the ordinary atmosphere in which the Upanishads move. It is not on account of the philosophical knowledge possessed by a few Kshatriyas, such as Ganaka or Pravāhāna, that the privilege of government belongs everywhere to the second class. That rests on a totally different basis. Such exceptional knowledge, as is displayed by a few kings, might be an excuse for their claiming the privileges belonging to the Brahmans, but it would never, in the eyes of the ancient Indian Āryas, be considered as an argument for their claiming kingly power. Therefore, although I am well aware that praśāsas is most frequently used in the sense of ruling, I have no doubt that Saṅkara likewise was fully aware of that, and that if he nevertheless explained prāśana here in the sense of prāśastritvam sishyānām, he did so because this meaning too was admissible, particularly here, where we may actually translate it by proclaiming, while the other meaning, that of ruling, would simply be impossible in the concatenation of ideas, which is placed before us in the Upanishad.
INTRODUCTION.

It seems, no doubt, extremely strange that neither the last redactors of the text of the Upanishads, nor the commentators, who probably knew the principal Upanishads by heart, should have perceived how certain passages in one Upanishad represented the same or nearly the same text which is found in another Upanishad, only occasionally with the most palpable corruptions.

Thus when the ceremony of offering a mantha or mash is described, we read in the Kāṇḍogya-upanishad V, 2, 6, that it is to be accompanied by certain words which on the whole are intelligible. But when the same passage occurs again in the Brāhmadārayaka, those words have been changed to such a degree, and in two different ways in the two Sākhās of the Mādhyanīnas and Kāvnas, that, though the commentator explains them, they are almost unintelligible. I shall place the three passages together in three parallel lines:

I. K‘hândogya-upanishad V, 2, 6
II. Brihad-árayaka, Mādhyandina-sákhā, XIV, 9, 3, 10:
III. Brihad-árayaka-upanishad, Kānva-sákhā, VI, 3, 5:

I. Amo nāmasy amā hi te sarvam idam sa hi gyeshtah
II. ëmo ’sy ëmam hi te mayi sa hi
III. ëmamsy ëmamhi te mahi sa hi

I. sreshtho rágadhhipatiḥ sa mā gyaishthym srail
II. rágésāno ’dhhipatiḥ sa mā rágésāno
III. rágésāno

I. shthym rágym ádhipatyam gamayatv aham evedam
II. ’dhipatim karotv iti.
III. ’dhipatim karotv iti.

I. sarvam asāniti.
II.
III.

The text in the K‘hândogya-upanishad yields a certain sense, viz. ‘Thou art Ama by name, for all this together exists in thee. He is the oldest and best, the king, the sovereign. May he make me the oldest, the best, the king, the sovereign. May I be all this.’ This, according to the commentator, is addressed to Prána, and Ama, though a purely artificial word, is used in the sense of Prána, or breath, in another passage also, viz. Brihad-árayaka-up. I, 3, 22. If therefore we accept this meaning of Ama, the rest is easy and intelligible.

But if we proceed to the Brihad-árayaka, in the Mādhyandina-sákhā, we find the commentator proposing the following interpretation: ‘O Mantha, thou art a full knower, complete knowledge of me belongs to thee.’ This meaning is obtained by deriving āmahi from ā + man, in the sense of knower, and then taking āmam, as a neuter, in the sense of knowledge, derivations which are simply impossible.

Lastly, if we come to the text of the Kānva-sákhā, the grammatical interpretation becomes bolder still. Saikara does not explain the passage at all, which is strange, but Ānandagiri interprets āmamsv tvam by ‘Thou knowest
INTRODUCTION.

(all), and āamahī te mahī, by ‘we know thy great (shape),’ which are again impossible forms.

But although there can be little doubt here that the reading of the K̄handogya-upanishad gives us the original text, or a text nearest to the original, no sound critic would venture to correct the readings of the Brāhadrāṇyaka. They are corruptions, but even as corruptions they possess authority, at all events up to a certain point, and it is the fixing of those certain points or chronological limits, which alone can impart a scientific character to our criticism of ancient texts.

In the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad Professor Cowell has pointed out a passage to me, where we must go beyond the text as it stood when commented on by the Saṅkarāṇanda. In the beginning of the fourth adhyāya all MSS. of the text read savasan, and this is the reading which the commentator seems anxious to explain, though not very successfully. I thought that possibly the commentator might have had before him the reading savasan, or so 'vasan, but both would be very unusual. Professor Cowell in his Various Readings, p. xii, conjectured samvasan, which would be liable to the same objection. He now, however, informs me that, as B. has samtvan, and C. satvan, he believes the original text to have been Satvan-Matsyeshu. This seems to me quite convincing, and is borne out by the reading of the Berlin MS., so far as it can be made out from Professor Weber's essay on the Upanishads, Indische Studien I, p. 419. I see that Boehtlingk and Roth in their Sanskrit Dictionary, s. v. satvat, suggest the same emendation.

The more we study the nature of Sanskrit MSS., the more, I believe, we shall feel convinced that their proper arrangement is one by locality rather than by time. I have frequently dwelt on this subject in the introductions to the successive volumes of my edition of the Rig-veda and its commentary by Sāyanākārya, and my convictions on this point have become stronger ever since. A MS., however modern, from the south of India or from the north, is more important as a check on the textus receptus of any Sanskrit work, as prevalent in Bengal or Bombay, than ever so many MSS., even if of greater antiquity, from the same locality. When therefore I was informed by my friend Dr. Bühler that he had discovered in Kashmir a MS. of the Aitareya-upanishad, I certainly expected some real help from such a treasure. The MS. is described by its discoverer in the last number of the Journal of the Bombay Asiatic Society, p. 34, and has since been sent to me by the Indian Government. It is written on birch bark (bhūrga), and in the alphabet commonly called Sāradā. The leaves are very much injured on the margin, and it is almost impossible to handle them without some injury. In many places the bark has shrunk, probably on being moistened, and the letters have become illegible. Apart from these drawbacks, there remain the difficulties inherent in the Sāradā alphabet which, owing to its numerous combinations, is extremely difficult to read, and very trying to eyes which are growing weak. However, I collated the Upanishad from the Aitareya-āravyaka, which turned out to be the last portion only, viz. the Samhitā-upanishad (Ait. Ār. III, 1–2), or, as it is called here, Samhitāraṇyā, and I am sorry to say my expectations have been disappointed. The MS. shows certain graphic peculiarities which Dr. Bühler has pointed out. It is particularly careful in the use of the sibilants, replacing the Visarga by sibilants, writing s+s and s+s instead of h+s and h+s; distinguishing also the Gīhvāmūliya and Upadhmaṇiya. If therefore the MS. writes antastha, we may be sure that it really meant to write so, and not antalastha, or, as it would have written, antasstha. It shows equal care in the use of the nasals, and generally carries on the sandhi between different paragraphs. Here and there I met with better readings than those given in Rajendralal Mitra’s edition, but in most cases the commentary would have been sufficient to restore the right reading. A few various readings, which seemed to deserve being mentioned, will be found in the notes. The MS., though carefully written, is not free from the ordinary blunders. At first one feels inclined to attribute some importance to every peculiarity of a new MS., but very soon one finds out that what seems peculiar, is in reality carelessness. Thus Ait. Ār. III, 1, 5, 2, the Kashmir MS. has pūrvaṃ akṣāraḥ rūpam, instead of what alone can be right, pūrvaṃ rūpam. Instead of prāgayā pasubhīḥ it writes repeatedly prāgayā pasubhīḥ, which is impossible. In III, 2, 2, it leaves out again and again manomaya between khandomaya and váñmaya; but that this is a mere accident we learn later on, where in the same sentence manomayo is found in its right place. Such cases reduce this MS. to its proper level, and make us look with suspicion on any accidental variations, such as I have noticed in my translation.

INTRODUCTION.

The additional paragraph, noticed by Dr. Bühler, is very indistinct, and contains, so far as I am able to find out, sānti verses only.

I have no doubt that the discovery of new MSS. of the Upanishads and their commentaries will throw new light on the very numerous difficulties with which a translator of the Upanishads, particularly in attempting a complete and faithful translation, has at present to grapple. Some of the difficulties, which existed thirty years ago, have been removed since by the general progress of Vedic scholarship, and by the editions of texts and commentaries and translations of Upanishads, many of which were known at that time in manuscript only. But I fully agree with M. Regnaud as to the difficultés considérables que les meilleures traductions laissent subsister, and which can be solved only by a continued study of the Upanishads, the Āranyakas, the Brāhmaṇas, and the Vedānta-sūtras.

MEANING OF THE WORD UPAnishAD.

How Upanishad became the recognised name of the philosophical treatises contained in the Veda is difficult to explain. Most European scholars are agreed in deriving upa-ni-shad from the root sad, to sit down, preceded by the two prepositions ni, down, and upa, near, so that it would express the idea of session, or assembly of pupils sitting down near their teacher to listen to his instruction. In the Trikândasesha, upanishad is explained by samipasadana, sitting down near a person.

Such a word, however, would have been applicable, it would seem, to any other portion of the Veda as well as to the chapters called Upanishad, and it has never been explained how its meaning came thus to be restricted. It is still more strange that upanishad, in the sense of session or assembly, has never, so far as I am aware, been met with. Whenever the word occurs, it has the meaning of doctrine, secret doctrine, or is simply used as the title of the philosophic treatises which constitute the gñânakânda, the knowledge portion, as opposed to the karmakânda, the work or ceremonial portion, of the Veda.

Native philosophers seem never to have thought of deriving upanishad from sad, to sit down. They derive it either from the root sad, in the sense of destruction, supposing these ancient treatises to have received their name because they were intended to destroy passion and ignorance by means of divine revelation, or from the root sad, in the sense of approaching, because a knowledge of Brahman comes near to us by means of the Upanishads, or because we approach Brahman by their help. Another explanation proposed by Saṅkara in his commentary on the Taittirīya- upanishad II, 9, is that the highest bliss is contained in the Upanishad (param sreyo 'syâm nishannam).

These explanations seem so wilfully perverse that it is difficult to understand the unanimity of native scholars. We ought to take into account, however, that very general tendency among half-educated people, to acquiesce in any etymology which accounts for the most prevalent meaning of a word. The Āraṇyakas abound in

---

1 Pâṇini I, 4, 79, has upanishatkṛitya.
2 M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 318; Colebrooke, Essays, I, 92; Regnand, Materiaux, p. 7.
such etymologies, which probably were never intended as real etymologies, in our sense of the word, but simply as plays on words, helping to account somehow for their meaning. The Upanishads, no doubt, were meant to destroy ignorance and passion, and nothing seemed more natural therefore than that their etymological meaning should be that of destroyers.

The history and the genius of the Sanskrit language leave little doubt that upanishad meant originally session, particularly a session consisting of pupils, assembled at a respectful distance round their teacher.

With upa alone, sad occurs as early as the hymns of the Rig-veda, in the sense of approaching respectfully:

Rig-veda IX, 11, 6. Nāmasā it upa sīdata, 'approach him with praise.' See also Rig-veda X, 73, 11; I, 65, 1.

In the Kāndogya-upanishad VI, 13, 1, a teacher says to his pupil, atha mā prātar upasīdathāḥ, 'come to me (for advice) to-morrow morning.'

In the same Upanishad VII, 8, 1, a distinction is made between those who serve their teachers (pariśkaritā), and those who are admitted to their more intimate society (upasattā, comm. samipagāḥ, antaraṅgagāḥ, priyāḥ).

Again, in the Kāndogya-upanishad VII, 1, we read of a pupil approaching his teacher (upāsasāda or upasasāsāda), and of the teacher telling him to approach with what he knows, i.e. to tell him first what he has learnt already (yad vettha tena mopasida).

In the Sūtras (Gobhiliya Grhyā-sūtra II, 10, 38) upasad is the recognised term for the position assumed by a pupil with his hands folded and his eyes looking up to the teacher who is to instruct him.

It should be stated, however, that no passage has yet been met with in which upa-ni-sad is used in the sense of pupils approaching and listening to their teacher. In the

---

1 The distinction between possible and real etymologies is as modern as that between legend and history.

2 See M. M.'s History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 318.

3 See also K'hand. Up. VI, 1, 2.
only passage in which upanishasāda occurs (Ait. Ār. II, 2, 1), it is used of Indra sitting down by the side of Visvāmitra, and it is curious to observe that both MSS. and commentaries give here upanishasāda, an entirely irregular form.

The same is the case with two other roots which are used almost synonymously with sad, viz. ās and vis. We find upa+ās used to express the position which the pupil occupies when listening to his teacher, e.g. Pāṇ. III, 4, 72, upāsito gurum bhavan, ‘thou hast approached the Guru,’ or upāsito gurur bhavatā, ‘the Guru has been approached by thee.’ We find pari+upa+ās used with regard to relations assembled round the bed of a dying friend, Kṝhānd. Up. VI, 15; or of hungry children sitting round their mother, and likened to people performing the Agnihotra sacrifice (Kṝhānd. Up. V, 24, 5). But I have never met with upa-ni-as in that sense.

We likewise find upa-vis used in the sense of sitting down to a discussion (Kṝhānd. Up. I, 8, 2), but I have never found upa+ni+vis as applied to a pupil listening to his teacher.

The two prepositions upa and ni occur, however, with pat, to fly, in the sense of flying down and settling near a person, Kṝhānd. Up. IV, 7, 2 ; IV, 8, 2. And the same prepositions joined to the verb sri, impart to it the meaning of sitting down beneath a person, so as to show him respect: Brāh. Ār. I, 4, 11. ‘Although a king is exalted, he sits down at the end of the sacrifice below the Brahman,’ brahmaivānantata upanisrayati.

Sad, with upa and ni, occurs in upanishādin only, and has there the meaning of subject, e.g. Satap. Brāhm. IX, 4, 3, 3, kṣatrāya tad visam adhastād upanishādinim karoti, ‘he thus makes the Viś (citizen) below, subject to the Kṣatriya.’

Sometimes nishad is used by the side of upanishad, and so far as we can judge, without any difference of meaning.1

All we can say therefore, for the present, is that upani-shad, besides being the recognised title of certain philosophical treatises, occurs also in the sense of doctrine and of secret doctrine, and that it seems to have assumed this meaning from having been used originally in the sense of session or assembly in which one or more pupils receive instruction from a teacher.

Thus we find the word upanishad used in the Upanishads themselves in the following meanings:

1. Secret or esoteric explanation, whether true or false.
2. Knowledge derived from such explanation.
3. Special rules or observances incumbent on those who have received such knowledge.
4. Title of the books containing such knowledge.

I. Ait. Âr. III, 1, 6, 3. 'For this Upanishad, i.e. in order to obtain the information about the true meaning of Samhitâ, Târukshya served as a cowherd for a whole year.'

Taitt. Up. I, 3. 'We shall now explain the Upanishad of the Samhitâ.'

Ait. Âr. III, 2, 5, 1. 'Next follows this Upanishad of the whole speech. True, all these are Upanishads of the whole speech, but this they declare especially.'

Talav. Up. IV, 7. 'As you have asked me to tell you the Upanishad, the Upanishad has now been told you. We have told you the Brâhmî Upanishad,’ i.e. the true meaning of Brahman.

In the Khând. Up. III, 11, 3, after the meaning of Brahman has been explained, the text says: ‘To him who thus knows this Brahma upanishad (the secret doctrine of Brahman) the sun does not rise and does not set.’ In the next paragraph brahma itself is used, meaning either Brahman as the object taught in the Upanishad, or, by a slight change of meaning, the Upanishad itself.

Khând. Up. I, 13, 4. ‘Speech yields its milk to him who knows this Upanishad (secret doctrine) of the Sâmans in this wise.’

Khând. Up. VIII, 8, 4. When Indra and Virokanâ had both misunderstood the teaching of Prâgapati, he says: ‘They both go away without having perceived and without having known the Self, and whoever of these two, whether

f 2
Devas or Asuras, will follow this doctrine (upanishad), will perish.'

II. In the K'hând. Up. I, i, after the deeper meaning of the Udgîtha or Om has been described, the advantage of knowing that deeper meaning is put forward, and it is said that the sacrifice which a man performs with knowledge, with faith, and with the Upanishad, i.e. with an understanding of its deeper meaning, is more powerful.

III. In the Taittiriya-upanishad, at the end of the second chapter, called the Brahmânandavalli, and again at the end of the tenth chapter, the text itself says: Ity upanishad, 'this is the Upanishad, the true doctrine.'

IV. In the Kaushitaki-upanishad II, 1; 2, we read: 'Let him not beg, this is the Upanishad for him who knows this.' Here upanishad stands for vrata or rahasya-vrata, rule.

WORKS ON THE UPAnishads.

Anquetil Duperron, Oupnek'hat, 1801, 1802. See page clii.

Translation of the Moonduk-Oopunishud of the Uthurvu Ved, p. 23.
Translation of the Cêna Upanishad, one of the Chapters of the Sâma Vêda, p. 41.
Translation of the Kut'h-Oopunishud of the Ujoor-Ved, p. 55.
Translation of the Ishopanishad, one of the Chapters of the Yajur Vêda, p. 81.

H. T. Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, in three volumes, 1873.

K. J. H. Windischmann, Die Philosophie im Fortgange der Weltgeschichte, 1827–34.

F. W. Windischmann, Sancara, seu de theologumenis Vedanticorum, 1833.

Rajendralal Mitra, The K'hândogya Upanishad, with extracts from the commentary of Sânkara; Bibliotheca Indica. Calcutta, 1862.
INTRODUCTION.

A. E. Gough, The Philosophy of the Upanishads; Calcutta Review, CXXXI.

Editions of the Upanishads, their commentaries and glosses have been published in the Tattvabodhini patrikā, and by Poley (who has also translated several Upanishads into French), by Röer, Cowell, Rajendralal Mitra, Harāandra Vidyabhūshana, Visvanātha Sāstri, Rāmamaya Tarkaratna, and others. For fuller titles see Gildemeister, Bibliotheca Sanscrita, and E. Haas, Catalogue of Sanskrit and Pāli Books in the British Museum, s. v. Upanishads.
THE KHAÑDOGYA-UPANISHAD.

The Khañdogya-upanishad belongs to the Sâma-veda. Together with the Brîhad-âranyaka, which belongs to the Yagur-veda, it has contributed the most important materials to what may be called the orthodox philosophy of India, the Vedânta, i.e. the end, the purpose, the highest object of the Veda. It consists of eight adhyâyas or lectures, and formed part of a Khañdogya-brâhmaṇa, in which it was preceded by two other adhyâyas. While MSS. of the Khañdogya-upanishad and its commentary are frequent, no MSS. of the whole Brâhmaṇa has been met with in Europe. Several scholars had actually doubted its existence, but Rajendralal Mitra, in the Introduction to his translation of the Khañdogya-upanishad, states that in India 'MSS. of the work are easily available, though as yet he has seen no commentary attached to the Brâhmaṇa portion of any one of them.'

According to general accep-

---

1 Vedânta, as a technical term, did not mean originally the last portions of the Veda, or chapters placed, as it were, at the end of a volume of Vedic literature, but the end, i.e. the object, the highest purpose of the Veda. There are, of course, passages, like the one in the Taittiriya-âranyaka (ed. Rajendralal Mitra, p. 820), which have been misunderstood both by native and European scholars, and where vedânta means simply the end of the Veda: -yo vedâdau svarâk proktâ vedânte ka pratishhitâh, 'the Om which is pronounced at the beginning of the Veda, and has its place also at the end of the Veda.' Here vedânta stands simply in opposition to vedâdau, and it is impossible to translate it, as Sâyana does, by Vedânta or Upanishad. Vedânta, in the sense of philosophy, occurs in the Taittiriya-âranyaka (p. 817), in a verse of the Nârâyânya-upanishad, repeated in the Mundaka-upanishad III, 2, 6, and elsewhere, vedântavignânânasunismitârthâh, 'those who have well understood the object of the knowledge arising from the Vedânta,' not from the last books of the Veda; and Svetâvatara-up. VI, 22, vedânte paraman guhyam, 'the highest mystery in the Vedânta.' Afterwards it is used in the plural also, e. g. Kshurikopanishad, 10 (Bibl. Ind. p. 210), punârîketi vedânteshu nigadyate, 'it is called punarîka in the Vedântas,' i.e. in the Khañdogya and other Upanishads, as the commentator says, but not in the last books of each Veda. A curious passage is found in the Gantama-sūtras XIX, 12, where a distinction seems to be made between Upanishad and Vedânta. Sacred Books, vol. ii, p. 272.

tation,' he adds, 'the work embraces ten chapters, of which the first two are reckoned to be the Brâhmaṇa, and the rest is known under the name of Kândogya- upanishad. In their arrangement and style the two portions differ greatly, and judged by them they appear to be productions of very different ages, though both are evidently relics of pretty remote antiquity. Of the two chapters of the Kândogya-brâhmaṇa\(^1\), the first includes eight sūktas (hymns) on the ceremony of marriage, and the rites necessary to be observed at the birth of a child. The first sūkta is intended to be recited when offering an oblation to Agni on the occasion of a marriage, and its object is to pray for prosperity in behalf of the married couple. The second prays for long life, kind relatives, and a numerous progeny. The third is the marriage pledge by which the contracting parties bind themselves to each other. Its spirit may be guessed from a single verse. In talking of the unanimity with which they will dwell, the bridegroom addresses his bride, "That heart of thine shall be mine, and this heart of mine shall be thine\(^2\)." The fourth and the fifth invoke Agni, Vâyu, Kândramas, and Sûrya to bless the couple and ensure healthful progeny. The sixth is a mantra for offering an oblation on the birth of a child; and the seventh and the eighth are prayers for its being healthy, wealthy, and powerful, not weak, poor, or mute, and to ensure a profusion of wealth and milch-cows. The first sūkta of the second chapter is addressed to the Earth, Agni, and Indra, with a prayer for wealth, health, and prosperity; the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth are mantras for offering oblations to cattle, the manes, Sûrya, and divers minor deities. The seventh is a curse upon worms, insects, flies, and other nuisances, and the last, the concluding mantra of the marriage ceremony, in which a general blessing is invoked for all concerned.'

After this statement there can be but little doubt that

\(^1\) It begins, Om, deva savitaḥ, pra suva yagñam pra suva yagñapatim bhagāya. The second begins, yaḥ prákyām disi sarparāga esha te baliḥ.

\(^2\) Yad etad dhridayam tava tad astu hridayam mama, Yad idam hridayam mama tad astu hridayam tava.
this Upanishad originally formed part of a Brâhmaṇa. This may have been called either by a general name, the Brâhmaṇa of the Khândogas, the followers of the Sâma-veda, or, on account of the prominent place occupied in it by the Upanishad, the Upanishad-brâhmaṇa. In that case it would be one of the eight Brâhmaṇas of the Sâma-veda, enumerated by Kumârila Bhatta and others, and called simply Upanishad, scil. Brâhmaṇa.

The text of the Upanishad with the commentary of Saṅkara and the gloss of Anandagiri has been published in the Bibliotheca Indica. The edition can only claim the character of a manuscript, and of a manuscript not always very correctly read.

A translation of the Upanishad was published, likewise in the Bibliotheca Indica, by Rajendralal Mitra.

It is one of the Upanishads that was translated into Persian under the auspices of Dârâ Shukoh, and from Persian into French by Anquetil Duperron, in his Oup-nekhat, i.e. Secretum Tegendum. Portions of it were translated into English by Colebrooke in his Miscellaneous Essays, into Latin and German by F. W. Windischmann, in his Saṅkara, seu de theologumenis Vedanticorum (Bonn, 1833), and in a work published by his father, K. J. H. Windischmann, Die Philosophie im Fortgang der Weltgeschichte (Bonn, 1827–34). Professor A. Weber has treated of this Upanishad in his Indische Studien I, 254; likewise M. P. Regnaud in his Matériaux pour servir à l’histoire de la philosophie de l’Inde (Paris, 1876) and Mr. Gough in several articles on ‘the Philosophy of the Upanishads,’ in the Calcutta Review, No. CXXXI.

I have consulted my predecessors whenever there was a serious difficulty to solve in the translation of these ancient texts. These difficulties are very numerous, as those know

1 The same name seems, however, to be given to the adhyāya of the Talavakāra-brâhmaṇa, which contains the Kena-upanishad.
2 M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 348. Most valuable information on the literature of the Sâma-veda may be found in Dr. Burnell’s editions of the smaller Brâhmaṇas of that Veda.
3 M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 325.
best who have attempted to give complete translations of these ancient texts. It will be seen that my translation differs sometimes very considerably from those of my predecessors. Though I have but seldom entered into any controversy with them, they may rest assured that I have not deviated from them without careful reflection.

II.

THE TALAVAKÂRA-UPANISHAD.

This Upanishad is best known by the name of Kena-upanishad, from its first word. The name of brâhmi-upanishad (IV, 7) can hardly be considered as a title. It means ‘the teaching of Brahman,’ and is used with reference to other Upanishads also. Saṅkara, in his commentary, tells us that this Upanishad forms the ninth adhyāya of a Brâhmaṇa, or, if we take his words quite literally, he says, ‘the beginning of the ninth adhyāya is “the Upanishad beginning with the words Keshita, and treating of the Highest Brahman has to be taught.”’ In the eight preceding adhyāyas, he tells us, all the sacred rites or sacrifices had been fully explained, and likewise the meditations (upāsana) on the prâna (vital breath) which belongs to all these sacrifices, and those meditations also which have reference to the fivefold and sevenfold Sâmans. After that followed Gâyatra-sâman and the Vâmsa, the genealogical list. All this would naturally form the subject of a Sâma-veda-brâhmaṇa, and we find portions corresponding to the description given by Saṅkara in the Khandogya-upanishad, e.g. the fivefold Sâman, II, 2; the sevenfold Sâman, II, 8; the Gâyatra-sâman, III, 12, 1.

Ānandaṅgâna tells us that our Upanishad belonged to the Sâkhâ of the Talavakâras.

All this had formerly to be taken on trust, because no Brâhmaṇa was known containing the Upanishad. Dr. Burnell, however, has lately discovered a Brâhmaṇa of the Sâma-veda which comes very near the description given by Saṅkara. In a letter dated Tanjore, 8th Dec. 1878, he writes: 'It appears to me that you would be glad to know the following about the Kena-upanishad, as it occurs in my MS. of the Talavakâra-brâhmaṇa.

1 See before, p. Ixxxiii.

'The last book but one of this Brâhmaṇa is termed Upanishad-brâhmaṇa. It consists of 145 khaṇḍas treating of the Gâyatra-sāman, and the 134th is a Vamsa. The Kena-upanishad comprises the 135–145 khaṇḍas, or the tenth anuvāka of a chapter. The 139th section begins: ásā vâ idam agra āsit, &c.

'My MS. of the Talavakâra-brâhmaṇa agrees, as regards the contents, exactly with what Saṅkara says, but not in the divisions. He says that the Kena-upanishad begins the ninth adhyāya, but that is not so in my MS. Neither the beginning nor the end of this Upanishad is noticed particularly.

'The last book of this Brâhmaṇa is the Ārsheya-brâhmaṇa, which I printed last February.

'Among the teachers quoted in the Brâhmaṇa I have noticed both Tândya and Sâtyâyani. I should not be surprised to find in it the difficult quotations which are incorrectly given in the MSS. of Sāyana’s commentary on the Rig-veda. The story of Apâlâ, quoted by Sâyana in his commentary on the Rig-veda, VIII, 80, as from the Sâtyâyanaka, is found word for word, except some trivial var. lectiones, in sections 220–221 of the Agnishṭoma book of the Talavakâra-brâhmaṇa. The Sâtyâyanins seem to be closely connected with the Talavakâra-sâkhâ.'

From a communication made by Dr. Burnell to the Academy (1 Feb. 79), I gather that this Talavakâra-brâhmaṇa is called by those who study it ‘Gaiminîya-brâhmaṇa,’ after the Sâkhâ of the Sâma-veda which they follow. The account given in the Academy differs on some particulars slightly from that given in Dr. Burnell’s letter to me. He writes: ‘The largest part of the Brâhmaṇa treats of the sacrifices and the Sâmans used at them. The first chapter is on the Agnihotra, and the Agnishṭoma and other rites follow at great length. Then comes a book termed Upanishad-brâhmaṇa. This contains 145 sections in four chapters. It begins with speculations on the Gâyatra-sâman, followed by a Vamsa; next, some similar matter and another Vamsa. Then (§§ 135–138) comes the Kenaupanishad (Talavakâra). The last book is the Ârsheya. The Upanishad forms the tenth anuvâka of the fourth chapter, not the beginning of a ninth chapter, as Sañkara remarks.'

The Kena-upanishad has been frequently published and translated. It forms part of Dârâ Shukoh’s Persian, and Anquetil Duperron’s Latin translations. It was several times published in English by Rammohun Roy (Translations of Several Principal Books, Passages, and Texts of the Veda, London, 1832, p. 41), in German by Windischmann, Poley, and others. It has been more or less fully discussed by Colebrooke, Windischmann, Poley, Weber, Röer, Gough, and Regnaud in the books mentioned before.

Besides the text of this Upanishad contained in the Brâhmaṇa of the Sâma-veda, there is another text, slightly differing, belonging to the Atharva-veda, and there are commentaries on both texts (Colebrooke, Misc. Essays, 1873, II, p. 80).

III.

THE AITAREYA-ÂRANYAKA.

In giving a translation of the Aitareya-upanishad, I found it necessary to give at the same time a translation of that portion of the Aitareya-âranyaka which precedes the Upani-shad. The Âranyakas seem to have been from the beginning the proper repositories of the ancient Upanishads, though it is difficult at first sight to find out in what relation the Upanishads stood to the Âranyakas. The Âranyakas are to be read and studied, not in the village (grâme), but in the forest, and so are the Upanishads. But the subjects treated in the Upanishads belong to a very different order from those treated in the other portions of the Âranyakas, the former being philosophical, the latter liturgical.

The liturgical chapters of the Âranyakas might quite as well have formed part of the Brâhmaṇas, and but for the restriction that they are to be read in the forest, it is difficult to distinguish between them and the Brâhmaṇas. The first chapter of the Aitareya-áryaka is a mere continuation of the Aitareya-bráhmaṇa, and gives the description of the Mahávrata, the last day but one of the Gavámayana, a sattra or sacrifice which is supposed to last a whole year. The duties which are to be performed by the Hotri priests are described in the Aitareya-áryaka; not all, however, but those only which are peculiar to the Mahávrata day. The general rules for the performance of the Mahávrata are to be taken over from other sacrifices, such as the Visvagīt, Káturvimsa, &c., which form the type (prakṛiti) of the Mahávrata. Thus the two śastras or recitations, called āgya-prāuga, are taken over from the Visvagīt, the śastras of the Hotrakas from the Káturvimsa. The Mahávrata is treated here as belonging to the Gavámayana sattra, which is described in a different Sākhā, see Taśtārīya Samhitā VII, 5, 8, and partly in other Vedas. It is the day preceding the udáyanīya, the last day of the sattra. It can be celebrated, however, by itself also, as an ekāha or ahina sacrifice, and in the latter case it is the tenth day of the Ekadāśarātra (eleven nights sacrifice) called Pundarika.

Sāyana does not hesitate to speak of the Aitareya-áryaka as a part of the Brāhmaṇa; and a still earlier authority, Saṅkara, by calling the Aitareya-upanishad by the name of Bahvrika-bráhmaṇa-upanishad, seems to imply that both the Upanishad and the Áranyaka may be classed as Brāhmaṇa.

The Aitareya-áryaka appears at first sight a miscellaneous work, consisting of liturgical treatises in the first, fourth, and fifth Áranyakas, and of three Upanishads, in the second and third Áranyakas. This, however, is not the case. The first Áranyaka is purely liturgical, giving a description of the Mahávrata, so far as it concerns the Hotri priest. It is written in the ordinary Brāhmaṇa style. Then follows the first Upanishad, Áranyaka II, 1–3, showing how certain portions of the Mahâvrata, as described in the first Âranyaka, can be made to suggest a deeper meaning, and ought to lead the mind of the sacrificer away from the purely outward ceremonial to meditation on higher subjects. Without a knowledge of the first Âranyaka therefore the first Upanishad would be almost unintelligible, and though its translation was extremely tedious, it could not well have been omitted.

\[1\] Aitareyabrāhmaṇae 'stī kāndam áranyakābhidham (introduction), a remark which he repeats in the fifth Áranyaka. He also speaks of the Áranyaka-vratarūpam brāhmaṇam; see p. cxiv, l. 24.

\[2\] In the same manner the Kaushitaki-upanishad is properly called Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad, though occurring in the Áranyaka; see Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad, ed. Cowell, p. 30.

The second and third Upanishads are not connected with the ceremonial of the Mahâvrata, but in the fourth and fifth Âranyakas the Mahâvrata forms again the principal subject, treated, however, not as before in the style of the Brâhmavâs, but in the style of Sûtras. The fourth Âranyaka contains nothing but a list of the Mahânâmñi hymns¹, but the fifth describes the Mahâvrata again, so that if the first Âranyaka may be looked upon as a portion of the Aitareya-brâhmavâs, the fifth could best be classed with the Sûtras of Ásvalâyana.

To a certain extent this fact, the composite character of the Aitareya-Âranyaka, is recognised even by native scholars, who generally do not trouble themselves much on such questions. They look both on the Aitareya-brâhmavâ and on the greater portion of Aitareya-Âranyaka as the works of an inspired Rishi, Mahidâsa Aitareya², but they consider the fourth and fifth books of the Âranyaka as contributed by purely human authors, such as Ásvalâyana and Saunaka, who, like other Sûtrakâras, took in verses belonging to other Sâkhâs, and did not confine their rules to their own Sâkhâ only.

There are many legends about Mahidâsa, the reputed author of the Aitareya-brâhmavâ and Âranyaka. He is quoted several times as Mahidâsa Aîtareya in the Âranyaka itself, though not in the Brâhmana. We also meet his name in the Khândogya-upanishad (III, 16, 7), where we are told that he lived to an age of 116 years. All this, however, would only prove that, at the time of the composition or collection of these Âranyakas and Upanishads, a sage was known of the name of Mahidâsa Aîtareya, descended possibly from Itara or Itarâ, and that one text of the Brâhmanas and the Âranyakas of the Bahvrikas was handed down in the family of the Aîtareyins.

¹ See Boehtlingk and Roth, s. v. 'Neun Vedische Verse die in ihrem vollständigen Wortlaut aber noch nicht nachgewiesen sind.' Weber, Indische Studien VIII, 68. How these hymns are to be employed we learn from the Ásvalâyanasûtras VII, 12, 10, where we are told that if the Udgâtris sing the Sâkvara Sàman as the Prishâastotra, the nine verses beginning with Vidâ maghavan, and known by the name of Mahânâmñi, are to be joined in a peculiar manner. The only excuse given, why these Mahânâmñis are mentioned here, and not in the Brâhmavâ, is that they are to be studied in the forest.

² M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 177, 335.

Not content with this apparently very obvious explanation, later theologians tried to discover their own reasons for the name of Aîtareya. Thus Sâyana, in his introduction to the Aîtareya-brâhmana, tells us that there was once a Rishi who had many wives. One of them was called Itarâ, and she had a son called Mahidâsa. His father preferred the sons of his other wives to Mahidâsa, and once he insulted him in the sacrificial hall, by placing his other sons on his lap, but not Mahidâsa. Mahidâsa’s mother, seeing her son with tears in his eyes, prayed to her tutelary goddess, the Earth (sviyakuladevâtâ Bhûmir), and the goddess in her heavenly form appeared in the midst of the assembly, placed Mahidâsa on a throne, and on account of his learning, gave him the gift of knowing the Brâhmana, consisting of forty adhyâyas, and, as Sâyana calls it, another Brâhmana, ‘treating of the Âranyaka duties’ (âranyakavratarûpam brâhmanam).

Without attaching much value to the legend of Itarâ, we see at all events that Sâyana considered what we call the Aîtareyâranyaka as a kind of Brâhmana, not however the whole of it, but only the first, second, and third Âranyakas (atha mahâvratam ityâdikam âkâryâ âkâryâ ityantam). How easy it was for Hindu theologians to invent such legends we see from another account of Mahidâsa, given by Ânandatirtha in his notes on the Aîtareya-upani-

1 Not 1600 years, as I printed by mistake; for 24 + 44 + 48 make 116 years. Rajendralal Mitra should not have corrected his right rendering 116 into 1600. Ait. Âr. Introduction, p. 3.
shad. He, as Colebrooke was the first to point out, takes Mahidāsa 'to be an incarnation of Nārāyana, proceeding from Visāla, son of Abga,' and he adds, that on the sudden appearance of this deity at a solemn celebration, the whole assembly of gods and priests (suraviprasaṅgha) fainted, but at the intercession of Brahmā, they were revived, and after making their obeisance, they were instructed in holy science. This avatāra was called Mahidāsa, because those venerable personages (mahin) declared themselves to be his slaves (dāsa)¹.

In order properly to understand this legend, we must remember that Ānandatīrtha, or rather Visvesvaratīrtha, whose commentary he explains, treated the whole of the Mahaitareya-upanishad from a Vaishnava point of view, and that his object was to identify Mahidāsa with Nārāyana. He therefore represents Nārāyana or Hari as the avatāra of Visāla, the son of Brahman (abgasuta), who appeared at a sacrifice, as described before, who received then and there the name of Mahidāsa (or Mahidāsa), and who taught this Upanishad. Any other person besides Mahidāsa would have been identified with the same ease by Visvesvaratīrtha with Visnu or Bhagavat.

A third legend has been made up out of these two by European scholars who represent Mahidāsa as the son of Visāla and Itarā, two persons who probably never met before, for even the Vaishnava commentator does not attempt to take liberties with the name of Aitareya, but simply states that the Upanishad was called Aitareyi, from Aitareya.

Leaving these legends for what they are worth, we may at all events retain the fact that, whoever was the author of the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa and the first three books of the Aitareya-āranyaka, was not the author of the two concluding Āranyakas. And this is confirmed in different ways. Sāyana, when quoting in his commentary on the Rig-veda from the last books, constantly calls it a Sūtra of Saunaka, while the fourth Āranyaka is specially ascribed to Áśvalāyana, the pupil and successor of Saunaka. These two names of Saunaka and Áśvalāyana are frequently intermixed. If, however, in certain MSS. the whole of the Aitareya-āraṇyaka is sometimes ascribed either to Áśvalāyana or Saunaka, this is more probably due to the colophon of the fourth and fifth Āraṇyakas having been mistaken for the title of the whole work than to the fact that such MSS. represent the text of the Āraṇyaka, as adopted by the school of Áśvalāyana.

¹ Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, 1873, II, p. 42.

The Aitareya-āraṇyaka consists of the following five Āraṇyakas:

The first Āraṇyaka has five Adhyāyas:

1. First Adhyāya, Atha mahāvrataṁ, has four Khandas, 1-4.
2. Second Adhyāya, Ā tvā ratham, has four Khandas, 5-8.
3. Third Adhyāya, Hiṅkāreṇa, has eight Khandas, 9-16.
4. Fourth Adhyāya, Atha sūdādohāk, has three Khandas, 17-19.
5. Fifth Adhyāya, Vasam saṃsati, has three Khandas, 20-22.

The second Āraṇyaka has seven Adhyāyas:

6. First Adhyāya, Eṣā panthāk, has eight Khandas, 1-8.
7. Second Adhyāya, Eṣā imaṁ lokam, has four Khandas, 9-12.
8. Third Adhyāya, Yo ha vá ātmānām, has eight (not three) Khandas, 13-20.
9. Fourth Adhyāya, Ātmā vá idam, has three Khandas, 21-23.
10. Fifth Adhyāya, Purushe vá, has one Khanda, 24.
11. Sixth Adhyāya, Ko 'yam ātmeti, has one Khanda, 25.
12. Seventh Adhyāya, Vān me manasi, has one Khanda, 26.

The third Āraṇyaka has two Adhyāyas:

13. First Adhyāya, Athātaḥ samhitaye upanishat, has six Khandas, 1-6.
14. Second Adhyāya, Prâno vamsa iti sthavirāḥ Sākalyaḥ, has six Khandas, 7-12.

The fourth Āraṇyaka has one Adhyāya:

15. First Adhyāya, Vidā maghavan, has one Khanda (the Mahānāmī's).

The fifth Āraṇyaka has three Adhyāyas:

16. First Adhyāya, Mahāvrataṣya paṅkavimsatim, has six Khandas, 1-6.
17. Second Adhyāya, (Grivāḥ) Yasyedam, has five Khandas, 7-11.
18. Third Adhyāya, (Urā) Indrāgni, has four Khandas, 11-14.

---

1 M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 235.
2 Not six, as in Rajendra Lal Mitra's edition.
With regard to the Upanishad, we must distinguish between the Aitareya- upanishad, properly so-called, which fills the fourth, fifth, and sixth adhyāyas of the second Āranyakā, and the Mahaitareya-upanishad ¹, also called by a more general name Bahvrika-upanishad, which comprises the whole of the second and third Āranyakas.

The Persian translator seems to have confined himself to the second Āranyakā ², to which he gives various titles, Sarbsar, Asarbeh, Antrteheh. That Antrteheh is a misreading of अंत्रत्रेह अत्रतो is pointed out long ago by Burnouf, and the same explanation applies probably to असरदे, asarbeh, and if to that, then to Sarbsar also. No explanation has ever been given why the Aitareya-upanishad should have been called Sarvasāra, which Professor Weber thinks was corrupted into Sarbsar. At all events the Aitareya- upanishad is not the Sarvasāra-upanishad, the Oupnek'hat Sarb, more correctly called Sarvopanishatsāra, and ascribed either to the Taittiriyaka or to the Atharva-veda ³.

The Aitareya-upanishad, properly so called, has been edited and translated in the Bibliotheca Indica by Dr. Röer. The whole of the Aitareya-āranyakā with Sāyana's commentary was published in the same series by Rajendralal Mitra.

Though I have had several MSS. of the text and commentary at my disposal, I have derived little aid from them, but have throughout endeavoured to restore that text which Saṅkara (the pupil of Govinda) and Sāyana had before them. Sāyana, for the Upanishad portion, follows Saṅkara's commentary, of which we have a gloss by Ānandaṅāna.

Colebrooke in his Essays (vol. ii, p. 42) says that he

1 This may have been the origin of a Rishi Mahaitareya, by the side of the Rishi Aitareya, mentioned in the Āsvalāyana Grihya-sūtras III, 4 (ed. Stenzler). Professor Weber takes Aitareya and Mahaitareya here as names of works, but he admits that in the Śāṅkhāyana Grihya-sūtras they are clearly names of Rishis (Ind. Stud. I, p. 389).
2 He translates II, 1–II, 3, 4, leaving out the rest of the third adhyāya; afterwards II, 4–II, 7.
3 Bibliotheca Indica, the Atharvāupanishads, p. 394.

[3]
possessed one gloss by Nârâyâendra on Saṅkara’s commentary, and another by Ānandatīrtha on a different gloss for the entire Upanishad. The gloss by Nârâyâendra, however, is, so Dr. Rost informs me, the same as that of Ānandagñâna, while, so far as I can see, the gloss contained in MS. E. I. H. 2386 (also MS. Wilson 401), to which Cole-brooke refers, is not a gloss by Ānandatīrtha at all, but a gloss by Visvesvaratīrtha on a commentary by Ānandatīr-thabhagavatpâdâkârya, also called Pûrnapragñâkârya, who explained the whole of the Mahaitareya-upanishad from a Vaishnava point of view.

IV.

THE KAUSHÎTAKI-BRÂHMÂNA-UPANISHAD.

The Kaushîtaki-upanishad, or, as it is more properly called, the Kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa-upanishad, belongs, like the Aitareya-upanishad, to the followers of the Rig-veda. It was translated into Persian under the title of Kokhenk, and has been published in the Bibliotheca Indica with Saṅkarânanda’s commentary and an excellent translation by Professor Cowell.

Though it is called the Kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa-upanishad, it does not form part of the Kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa in 30 adhyâyas which we possess, and we must therefore account for its name by admitting that the Āranyaka, of which it formed a portion, could be reckoned as part of the Brâhmaṇa literature of the Rig-veda (see Aitareya-āranyaka, Introduction, p. xcii), and that hence the Upanishad might be called the Upanishad of the Brâhmaṇa of the Kaushītakis.2

From a commentary discovered by Professor Cowell it appears that the four adhyâyas of this Upanishad

1 A MS. in the Notices of Sanskrit MSS., vol. ii, p. 133, ascribed to Abhinavârayâendra, called Ātmashañkâbhashyaśīkā, begins like the gloss edited by Dr. Röer, and ends like Sâyana’s commentary on the seventh adhyâya, as edited by Rajendralal Mitra. The same name is given in MS. Wilson 94, Śrîmatkaivalyendrasarasvatīpûryâpadâśishyâ-srimadabhinavârayâvendrasarasvati.

2 A Mahâ-kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa is quoted, but has not yet been met with.
were followed by five other adhyāyas, answering, so far as we can judge from a few extracts, to some of the adhyāyas of the Aitareya-āraṇyaka, while an imperfect MS. of an Āraṇyaka in the Royal Library at Berlin (Weber, Catalogue, p. 20) begins, like the Aitareya-āraṇyaka, with a description of the Mahāvrata, followed by discussions on the uktha in the second adhyāya; and then proceeds in the third adhyāya to give the story of Kītra Gāṇgīyāyani in the same words as the Kaushitaki-upaniṣad in the first adhyāya. Other MSS. again adopt different divisions. In one MS. of the commentary (MS. A), the four adhyāyas of the Upanishad are counted as sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth (ending with ityāraṇyake navamo 'dhyāyaḥ'); in another (MS. P) the third and fourth adhyāyas of the Upanishad are quoted as the fifth and sixth of the Kaushitaki-āraṇyaka, possibly agreeing therefore, to a certain extent, with the Berlin MS. In a MS. of the Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka in the Royal Library at Berlin, there are 15 adhyāyas, 1 and 2 corresponding to Ait. Ār. 1 and 5; 3–6 containing the Kaushitaki-upaniṣad; 7 and 8 corresponding to Ait. Ār. 3. Poley seems to have known a MS. in which the four adhyāyas of the Upanishad formed the first, seventh, eighth, and ninth adhyāyas of a Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa.

As there were various recensions of the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa (the Śāṅkhāyana, Kauthuma, &c.), the Upanishad also exists in at least two texts. The commentator, in some of its MSS., refers to the various readings of the Śākhās, explaining them, whenever there seems to be occasion for it. I have generally followed the text which is presupposed by Śaṅkarānanda's Dipikā, and contained in MSS. F, G (Cowell, Preface, p. v), so far as regards the third and fourth adhyāyas. According to Professor Cowell, Vidyāraṇya in his Sarvopanishadarthānubhūtiprakāṣa followed the text of the commentary, while Śaṅkarākārya, if we may trust to extracts in his commentary on the Vedānta-sūtras, followed the other text, contained in MS. A (Cowell, Preface, p. v).

1 See Weber, History of Sanskrit Literature, p. 50.
The style of the commentator differs in so marked a manner from that of Saṅkarākārya, that even without the fact that the author of the commentary on the Kaushitaki-upanishad is called Saṅkarānanda, it would have been difficult to ascribe it, as has been done by some scholars, to the famous Saṅkarākārya. Saṅkarānanda is called the teacher of Mādhavākārya (Hall, Index, p. 98), and the disciple of Ānandātma Muni (Hall, Index, p. 116).

I have had the great advantage of being able to consult for the Kaushitaki-upanishad, not only the text and commentary as edited by Professor Cowell, but also his excellent translation. If I differ from him in some points, this is but natural, considering the character of the text and the many difficulties that have still to be solved, before we can hope to arrive at a full understanding of these ancient philosophical treatises.

V.

THE VĀGASANEYI-SAMHITĀ-UPANISHAD.

The Vāgasaneyi-samhitā-upanishad, commonly called from its beginning, Īsā or Īsāvāsya, forms the fortieth and concluding chapter of the Samhitā of the White Yagur-veda. If the Samhitās are presupposed by the Brāhmaṇas, at least in that form in which we possess them, then this Upanishad, being the only one that forms part of a Samhitā, might claim a very early age. The Samhitā of the White Yagur-veda, however, is acknowledged to be of modern origin, as compared with the Samhitā of the Black Yagur-veda, and it would not be safe therefore to ascribe to this Upanishad a much higher antiquity than to those which have found a place in the older Brāhmaṇas and Āranyakas.

There are differences between the text, as contained in the Yagur-veda-samhitā, and the text of the Upanishad by itself. Those which are of some interest have been mentioned in the notes.

In some notes appended to the translation of this Upanishad I have called attention to what seems to me its peculiar character, namely, the recognition of the necessity of works as a preparation for the reception of the highest knowledge. This agrees well with the position occupied by this Upanishad at the end of the Samhita, in which the sacrificial works and the hymns that are to accompany them are contained. The doctrine that the moment a man is enlightened, he becomes free, as taught in other Upanishads, led to a rejection of all discipline and a condemnation of all sacrifices, which could hardly have been tolerated in the last chapter of the Yagur-veda-samhita, the liturgical Veda par excellence.

Other peculiarities of this Upanishad are the name Is, lord, a far more personal name for the highest Being than Brahman; the asūrya (demoniacal) or asūrya (sunless) worlds to which all go who have lost their self; Mātārisvan, used in the sense of prāna or spirit; asnāviram, without muscles, in the sense of incorporeal; and the distinction between sambhūti and asambhūti in verses 12–14.

The editions of the text, commentaries, and glosses, and the earlier translations may be seen in the works quoted before, p. lxxxiv.
FIRST PRAPÂTHAKA.

First Khandâ1.

1. Let a man meditate on the syllable 2 Om, called the udgîtha; for the udgîtha (a portion of the Sâma-veda) is sung, beginning with Om.

The full account, however, of Om is this:—

2. The essence 3 of all beings is the earth, the essence of the earth is water, the essence of water

1 The Khândogya-upanishad begins with recommending meditation on the syllable Om, a sacred syllable that had to be pronounced at the beginning of each Veda and of every recitation of Vedic hymns. As connected with the Sâma-veda, that syllable Om is called udgîtha. Its more usual name is prava. The object of the Upanishad is to explain the various meanings which the syllable Om may assume in the mind of a devotee, some of them being extremely artificial and senseless, till at last the highest meaning of Om is reached, viz. Brahman, the intelligent cause of the universe.

2 Akshara means both syllable and the imperishable, i.e. Brahman.

3 Essence, rasa, is explained in different ways, as origin, support, end, cause, and effect. Rasa means originally the sap of trees. That sap may be conceived either as the essence extracted from the tree, or as what gives vigour and life to a tree. In the former case it might be transferred to the conception of effect, in the latter to that of cause. In our sentence it has sometimes the one, sometimes the other meaning. Earth is the support of all beings, water pervades the earth, plants arise from water, man lives by plants, speech is the best part of man, the Rig-veda the best part of speech, the Sâma-veda the best extract from the Rik, udgîtha, or the syllable Om, the crown of the Sâma-veda.
the plants, the essence of plants man, the essence of man speech, the essence of speech the Rig-veda, the essence of the Rig-veda the Sâma-veda \(^1\), the essence of the Sâma-veda the udgîtha (which is Om).

3. That udgîtha (Om) is the best of all essences, the highest, deserving the highest place \(^2\), the eighth.

4. What then is the Rîk? What is the Sâman? What is the udgîtha? This is the question.

5. The Rîk indeed is speech, Sâman is breath, the udgîtha is the syllable Om. Now speech and breath, or Rîk and Sâman, form one couple.

6. And that couple is joined together in the syllable Om. When two people come together, they fulfil each other's desire.

7. Thus he who knowing this, meditates on the syllable (Om), the udgîtha, becomes indeed a fulfiller of desires.

8. That syllable is a syllable of permission, for whenever we permit anything, we say Om, yes. Now permission is gratification. He who knowing this meditates on the syllable (Om), the udgîtha, becomes indeed a gratifier of desires.

9. By that syllable does the threefold knowledge (the sacrifice, more particularly the Soma-sacrifice, as founded on the three Vedas) proceed. When the Adhvaryu priest gives an order, he says Om. When the Hotri priest recites, he says Om. When the Udgâtri priest sings, he says Om,

---

\(^1\) Because most of the hymns of the Sâma-veda are taken from the Rig-veda.

\(^2\) Parârdhya is here derived from para, highest, and ardha, place. The eighth means the eighth or last in the series of essences.
—all for the glory of that syllable. The threefold knowledge (the sacrifice) proceeds by the greatness of that syllable (the vital breaths), and by its essence (the oblations).

10. Now therefore it would seem to follow, that both he who knows this (the true meaning of the syllable Om), and he who does not, perform the same sacrifice. But this is not so, for knowledge and ignorance are different. The sacrifice which a man performs with knowledge, faith, and the Upanishad is more powerful. This is the full account of the syllable Om.

1 These are allusions to sacrificial technicalities, all intended to show the importance of the syllable Om, partly as a mere word, used at the sacrifices, partly as the mysterious name of the Highest Self. As every priest at the Soma-sacrifices, in which three classes of priests are always engaged, has to begin his part of the ceremonial with Om, therefore the whole sacrifice is said to be dependent on the syllable Om, and to be for the glory of that syllable, as an emblem of the Highest Self, a knowledge of whom is the indirect result of all sacrifices. The greatness of the syllable Om is explained by the vital breaths of the priest, the sacrificer, and his wife; its essence by rice, corn, &c., which constitute the oblations. Why breath and food are due to the syllable Om is explained by the sacrifice, which is dependent on that syllable, ascending to the sun, the sun sending rain, rain producing food, and food producing breath and life.

2 He who simply pronounces the syllable Om as part of his recitation at a sacrifice, and he who knows the hidden meaning of that syllable, both may perform the same sacrifice. But that performed by the latter is more powerful, because knowledge is better than ignorance. This is, as usual, explained by some comparisons. It is true that both he who knows the quality of the haritaki and he who does not, are purged alike if they take it. But on the other hand, if a jeweller and a mere clod sell a precious stone, the knowledge of the former bears better fruit than the ignorance of the latter.

3 Upanishad is here explained by yoga, and yoga by devatâdi-vishayam upâsanam, meditation directed to certain deities. More
SECOND KHANDA.

1. When the Devas and Asuras struggled together, both of the race of Pragâpati, the Devas took the udgitha (Om), thinking they would vanquish the Asuras with it.

2. They meditated on the udgitha (Om) as the breath (scent) in the nose, but the Asuras pierced it with evil. Therefore we smell by the breath in the nose both what is good-smelling and what is bad-smelling. For the breath was pierced by evil.

3. Then they meditated on the udgitha (Om) as speech, but the Asuras pierced it with evil. Therefore we speak both truth and falsehood. For speech is pierced by evil.

4. Then they meditated on the udgitha (Om) as the eye, but the Asuras pierced it with evil. Therefore, however, it refers to this very upanishad, i.e. to the udgitha-vidyâ, the doctrine of the secret meaning of Om, as here explained.

1 A very similar story is told in the Brâhad-âranyaka I, 1, 3, 1. But though the coincidences between the two are considerable, amounting sometimes to verbal identity, the purport of the two seems to be different. See Vedânta-sûtra III, 3, 6.

2 Devas and Asuras, gods and demons, are here explained by the commentator as the good and evil inclinations of man; Pra-gâpati as man in general.

3 Udgîtha stands, according to the commentator, for the sacrificial act to be performed by the Udgâtri, the Sâma-veda priest, with the udgîtha hymns; and as these sacrificial acts always form part of the Gyotish/oma &c., these great Soma-sacrifices are really intended. In the second place, however, the commentator takes udgîtha in the sense of Udgâtri, the performer of the udgîtha, which is or was by the Devas thought to be the breath in the nose. I have preferred to take udgîtha in the sense of Om, and all that is implied by it.

4 They asked that breath should recite the udgîtha. Comm.
fore we see both what is sightly and unsightly. For the eye is pierced by evil.

5. Then they meditated on the udgitha (Om) as the ear, but the Asuras pierced it with evil. Therefore we hear both what should be heard and what should not be heard. For the ear is pierced by evil.

6. Then they meditated on the udgitha (Om) as the mind, but the Asuras pierced it with evil. Therefore we conceive both what should be conceived and what should not be conceived. For the mind is pierced by evil.

7. Then comes this breath (of life) in the mouth. They meditated on the udgitha (Om) as that breath. When the Asuras came to it, they were scattered, as (a ball of earth) would be scattered when hitting a solid stone.

8. Thus, as a ball of earth is scattered when hitting on a solid stone, will he be scattered who wishes evil to one who knows this, or who persecutes him; for he is a solid stone.

9. By it (the breath in the mouth) he distinguishes neither what is good nor what is bad-smelling, for that breath is free from evil. What we eat and drink with it supports the other vital breaths (i.e. the senses, such as smell, &c.) When at the time of death he does not find that breath (in the

---

1 Mukhya prāna is used in two senses, the principal or vital breath, also called śreshṭha, and the breath in the mouth, also called āsanya.

2 According to the commentator, the assemblage of the other vital breaths or senses is here meant. They depart when the breath of the mouth, sometimes called sarvambhari, all-supporting, does no longer, by eating and drinking, support them.
mouth, through which he eats and drinks and lives), then he departs. He opens the mouth at the time of death (as if wishing to eat).

10. Ángiras \(^1\) meditated on the udgítha (Om) as that breath, and people hold it to be Ángiras, i.e. the essence of the members (angânåm rasaḥ);

11. Therefore Br̥haspati meditated on udgítha (Om) as that breath, and people hold it to be Br̥haspati, for speech is br̥hati, and he (that breath) is the lord (pati) of speech;

12. Therefore Ayåsyä meditated on the udgítha (Om) as that breath, and people hold it to be Ayåsyä, because it comes (ayati) from the mouth (åsyä);

13. Therefore Vaka Dålbhya knew it. He was the Udgåtr̥i (singer) of the Naimishiya-sacrificers, and by singing he obtained for them their wishes.

14. He who knows this, and meditates on the syllable Om (the imperishable udgítha) as the breath of life in the mouth, he obtains all wishes by singing. So much for the udgítha (Om) as meditated on with reference to the body \(^2\).

\(^1\) The paragraphs from 10 to 14 are differently explained by Indian commentators. By treating the nominatives ángirås, br̥haspatis, and ayåsyas (here the printed text reads ayåsyam) as accusatives, or by admitting the omission of an iti after them, they connect paragraphs 9, 10, and 11 with paragraph 12, and thus gain the meaning that Vaka Dålbhya meditated on the breath in the mouth as Ángiras, Br̥haspati, and Ayåsyä, instead of those saints having themselves thus meditated; and that he, knowing the secret names and qualities of the breath, obtained, when acting as Udgåtr̥i priest, the wishes of those for whom he sacrificed. Tena is difficult to explain, unless we take it in the sense of tenånumisstah, taught by him.

\(^2\) Adhyåtma means with reference to the body, not with reference to the self or the soul. Having explained the symbolical
Third Khanda.

1. Now follows the meditation on the udgitha with reference to the gods. Let a man meditate on the udgitha (Om) as he who sends warmth (the sun in the sky). When the sun rises it sings as Udgātri for the sake of all creatures. When it rises it destroys the fear of darkness. He who knows this, is able to destroy the fear of darkness (ignorance).

2. This (the breath in the mouth) and that (the sun) are the same. This is hot and that is hot. This they call svara (sound), and that they call pratyāsvara (reflected sound). Therefore let a man meditate on the udgitha (Om) as this and that (as breath and as sun).

3. Then let a man meditate on the udgitha (Om) as vyāna indeed. If we breathe up, that is prāna, the up-breathing. If we breathe down, that is apāna, the down-breathing. The combination of prāna and apāna is vyāna, back-breathing or holding in of the breath. This vyāna is speech. Therefore when we utter speech, we neither breathe up nor down.

4. Speech is Rik, and therefore when a man utters a Rik verse he neither breathes up nor down.

meaning of Om as applied to the body and its organs of sense, he now explains its symbolical meaning adhidaivatam, i.e. as applied to divine beings.

1 As applied to breath, svara is explained by the commentator in the sense of moving, going out; pratyāsvara, as applied to the sun, is explained as returning every day. More likely, however, svara as applied to breath means sound, Om itself being called svara (Kh. Up. I, 4, 3), and prasvāra in the Rig-veda-prātisākhya, 882. As applied to the sun, svara and pratyāsva were probably taken in the sense of light and reflected light.
Rik is Sāman, and therefore when a man utters a Sāman verse he neither breathes up nor down.

Sāman is udgitha, and therefore when a man sings (the udgitha, Om) he neither breathes up nor down.

5. And other works also which require strength, such as the production of fire by rubbing, running a race, stringing a strong bow, are performed without breathing up or down. Therefore let a man meditate on the udgitha (Om) as vyāṇa.

6. Let a man meditate on the syllables of the udgitha, i.e. of the word udgitha. Ut is breath (prāṇa), for by means of breath a man rises (uttish/hati). Gi is speech, for speeches are called girah. Tha is food, for by means of food all subsists (sthita).

7. Ut is heaven, gi the sky, tha the earth. Ut is the sun, gi the air, tha the fire. Ut is the Sāma-veda, gi the Yagur-veda, tha the Rig-veda 1.

---

1 The commentator supplies explanations to all these fanciful etymologies. The heaven is ut, because it is high; the sky is gi, because it gives out all the worlds (giranāt); earth is tha, because it is the place (sthāna) of living beings. The sun is ut, because it is high. The wind is gi, because it gives out fire, &c. (giranāt); fire is tha, because it is the place (sthāna) of the sacrifice. The Sāma-veda is ut, because it is praised as svarga; the Yagur-veda is gi, because the gods take the oblation offered with a Yagus; the Rig-veda is tha, because the Sāma verses stand in it. All this is very childish, and worse than childish, but it is interesting as a phase of human folly which is not restricted to the Brahmans of India. I take the following passage from an interesting article, ‘On the Ogam Beithluisnin and on Scythian Letters,’ by Dr. Charles Graves, Bishop of Limerick. ‘An Irish antiquary,’ he says, ‘writing several hundred years ago, proposes to give an account of the origin of the names of the notes in the musical scale.

‘It is asked here, according to Saint Augustine, What is chanting, or why is it so called? Answer. From this word cantalena ;
Speech yields the milk, which is the milk of speech itself, to him who thus knowing meditates on those and cantalena is the same thing as lenis cantus, i.e. a soft, sweet chant to God, and to the Virgin Mary, and to all the Saints. And the reason why the word puinca (puncta) is so called is because the points (or musical notes) ut, re, mi, fa, sol, la, hurt the devil and puncture him. And it is thus that these points are to be understood: viz. When Moses the son of Amram with his people in their Exodus was crossing the Red Sea, and Pharaoh and his host were following him, this was the chant which Moses had to protect him from Pharaoh and his host—these six points in praise of the Lord:

"The first point of these, i.e. ut: and ut in the Greek is the same as liberat in the Latin; and that is the same as saer in the Gaelic; i.e. O God, said Moses, deliver us from the harm of the devil.

"The second point of them, i.e. re: and re is the same as saer; i.e. O God, deliver us from everything hurtful and malignant.

"The third point, i.e. mi: and mi in the Greek is the same as militum in the Latin; and that is the same as ridere (a knight) in the Gaelic; i.e. O God, said Moses, deliver us from those knights who are pursuing us.

"The fourth point, i.e. fa: and fa in the Greek is the same as famulus in the Latin; and that is the same as mug (slave) in the Gaelic; i.e. O God, said Moses, deliver us from those slaves who are pursuing us.

"The fifth point, i.e. sol: and sol is the same as grian (sun); and that is the same as righteousness; because righteousness and Christ are not different; i.e. O Christ, said Moses, deliver us.

"The sixth point, i.e. la, is the same as lav; and that is the same as indail (wash); i.e. O God, said Moses, wash away our sins from us.

"And on the singing of that laud Pharaoh and his host were drowned.

"Understand, O man, that in whatever place this laud, i.e. this chant, is sung, the devil is bound by it, and his power is extirpated thence, and the power of God is called in."

We have been taught that the names of the first six notes

---

1 The milk of speech consists in rewards to be obtained by the Rig-veda, &c. Or we may translate, Speech yields its milk to him who is able to milk speech.
syllables of the name of udgītha, he becomes rich in food and able to eat food.

8. Next follows the fulfilment of prayers. Let a man thus meditate on the Upasaranas, i.e. the objects which have to be approached by meditation: Let him (the Udgātra) quickly reflect on the Sāman with which he is going to praise;

9. Let him quickly reflect on the Rik in which that Sāman occurs; on the Rishi (poet) by whom it was seen or composed; on the Devatā (object) which he is going to praise;

10. On the metre in which he is going to praise; on the tune with which he is going to sing for himself;

11. On the quarter of the world which he is going to praise. Lastly, having approached himself (his name, family, &c.) by meditation, let him sing the hymn of praise, reflecting on his desire, and avoiding all mistakes in pronunciation, &c. Quickly⁰¹ will the desire be then fulfilled to him, for the sake of which he may have offered his hymn of praise, yea, for which he may have offered his hymn of praise⁰².

in the gamut were suggested by the initial syllables of the first six hemistichs in one of the stanzas of a hymn to St. John:

\[ Ut\ queant\ laxis\ \\
\[ Resonare\ fibris\ \\
\[ Mīra\ gestorum\ \\
\[ Famuli\ tuorum,\ \\ \[ Solve\ pollut\ \\
\[ Labii\ reatum,\ \\
[Sancte\ Ioannes.]

¹ Abhyāro ha yat, lit. depend on it that it will be fulfilled, but always explained by quickly. See Kh. Up. II, 1, 4; III, 19, 4; V, 10, 7. Frequently, but wrongly, written with a dental s.

² The repetition of the last sentence is always an indication that a chapter is finished. This old division into chapters is of great importance for a proper study of the Upanishads.
FOURTH KHANDA.

1. Let a man meditate on the syllable Om, for the udgitha is sung beginning with Om. And this is the full account of the syllable Om:

2. The Devas, being afraid of death, entered upon (the performance of the sacrifice prescribed in) the threefold knowledge (the three Vedas). They covered themselves with the metrical hymns. Because they covered (khad) themselves with the hymns, therefore the hymns are called khandas.

3. Then, as a fisherman might observe a fish in the water, Death observed the Devas in the Rik, Yagus, and Sâman-(sacrifices). And the Devas seeing this, rose from the Rik, Yagus, and Sâman-sacrifices, and entered the Svara, i.e. the Om (they meditated on the Om).

4. When a man has mastered the Rig-veda, he says quite loud Om; the same, when he has mastered the Sâman and the Yagus. This Svara is the imperishable (syllable), the immortal, free from fear. Because the Devas entered it, therefore they became immortal, and free from fear.

5. He who knowing this loudly pronounces (pra- nauti) that syllable, enters the same (imperishable) syllable, the Svara, the immortal, free from fear, and having entered it, becomes immortal, as the Devas are immortal.

---

1 Cf. I, 3, 2.
2 Pranauti, he lauds, i.e. he meditates on. Comm.
FIFTH KHANDA.

1. The udgītha is the pranāvā, the pranāvā is the udgītha. And as the udgītha is the sun, so is the pranāvā, for he (the sun) goes sounding Om.

2. 'Him I sang praises to, therefore art thou my only one,' thus said Kaushitaki to his son. 'Do thou revolve his rays, then thou wilt have many sons.' So much in reference to the Devas.

3. Now with reference to the body. Let a man meditate on the udgītha as the breath (in the mouth), for he goes sounding Om.

4. 'Him I sang praises to, therefore art thou my only son,' thus said Kaushitaki to his son. 'Do thou therefore sing praises to the breath as manifold, if thou wishest to have many sons.'

5. He who knows that the udgītha is the pranāvā, and the pranāvā the udgītha, rectifies from the seat of the Hotrī priest any mistake committed by the Udgātrī priest in performing the udgītha, yea, in performing the udgītha.

SIXTH KHANDA.

1. The Rīk (veda) is this earth, the Sāman (veda) is fire. This Sāman (fire) rests on that Rīk (earth). Therefore the Sāman is sung as resting on the Rīk.

---

1 Pranāvā is the name used chiefly by the followers of the Rigveda, udgītha the name used by the followers of the Sāma-veda. Both words are intended for the syllable Om.

3 The breath in the mouth, or the chief breath, says Om, i.e. gives permission to the five senses to act, just as the sun, by saying Om, gives permission to all living beings to move about.

4 The Sāma verses are mostly taken from the Rig-veda.
Sá is this earth, ama is fire, and that makes Sáma.

2. The Rik is the sky, the Sáman air. This Sáman (air) rests on that Rik (sky). Therefore the Sáman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sá is the sky, ama the air, and that makes Sáma.

3. Rik is heaven, Sáman the sun. This Sáman (sun) rests on that Rik (heaven). Therefore the Sáman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sá is heaven, ama the sun, and that makes Sáma.

4. Rik is the stars, Sáman the moon. This Sáman (moon) rests on that Rik (stars). Therefore the Sáman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sá is the stars, ama the moon, and that makes Sáma.

5. Rik is the white light of the sun, Sáman the blue exceeding darkness¹ (in the sun). This Sáman (darkness) rests on that Rik (brightness). Therefore the Sáman is sung as resting on the Rik.

6. Sá is the white light of the sun, ama the blue exceeding darkness, and that makes Sáma.

Now that golden² person, who is seen within the sun, with golden beard and golden hair, golden altogether to the very tips of his nails,

7. Whose eyes are like blue lotus's³, his name is ut, for he has risen (udita) above all evil. He also who knows this, rises above all evil.

8. Rik and Sáman are his joints, and therefore he is udgitha. And therefore he who praises him

---

¹ The darkness which is seen by those who can concentrate their sight on the sun.
² Bright as gold.
³ The colour of the lotus is described by a comparison with the Kapyása, the seat of the monkey (kapiprishthânto yena upavisati). It was probably a botanical name.
(the ut) is called the Ud-gâtri (the out-singer). He (the golden person, called ut) is lord of the worlds beyond that (sun), and of all the wishes of the Devas (inhabiting those worlds). So much with reference to the Devas.

Seventh Khanda.

1. Now with reference to the body. Rik is speech, Sâman breath. This Sâman (breath) rests on that Rik (speech). Therefore the Sâman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sâ is speech, ama is breath, and that makes Sâma.

2. Rik is the eye, Sâman the self. This Sâman (shadow) rests on that Rik (eye). Therefore the Sâman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sâ is the eye, ama the self, and that makes Sâma.

3. Rik is the ear, Sâman the mind. This Sâman (mind) rests on that Rik (ear). Therefore the Sâman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sâ is the ear, ama the mind, and that makes Sâma.

4. Rik is the white light of the eye, Sâman the blue exceeding darkness. This Sâman (darkness) rests on the Rik (brightness). Therefore the Sâman is sung as resting on the Rik. Sâ is the white light of the eye, ama the blue exceeding darkness, and that makes Sâma.

5. Now the person who is seen in the eye, he is Rik, he is Sâman, Uktha, Yagus, Brahman. The form of that person (in the eye) is the same as the

---

1 Name of the principal priest of the Sâma-veda.
3 The shadow-self, the likeness or image thrown upon the eye; see Kh. Up. VIII, 9, 1.
4 A set of hymns to be recited, whereas the Sâman is sung, and the Yagus muttered.
form of the other person (in the sun), the joints of the one (Rik and Sâman) are the joints of the other, the name of the one (ut) is the name of the other.

6. He is lord of the worlds beneath that (the self in the eye), and of all the wishes of men. Therefore all who sing to the vinâ (lyre), sing him, and from him also they obtain wealth.

7. He who knowing this sings a Sâman, sings to both (the adhidaivata and adhyâtma self, the person in the sun and the person in the eye, as one and the same person). He obtains through the one, yea, he obtains the worlds beyond that, and the wishes of the Devas;

8. And he obtains through the other the worlds beneath that, and the wishes of men.

Therefore an Udgâtrî priest who knows this, may say (to the sacrificer for whom he officiates);

9. ‘What wish shall I obtain for you by my songs?’ For he who knowing this sings a Sâman is able to obtain wishes through his song, yea, through his song.

EIGHTH KHANDA.

1. There were once three men, well-versed in udgîtha¹, Silaka Sâlîvatya, Kaikitâyana Dâlbhya, and Pravâhana Gaivali. They said: ‘We are well-versed in udgîtha. Let us have a discussion on udgîtha.’

2. They all agreed and sat down. Then Pravâhana Gaivali² said: ‘Sirs, do you both speak first,

¹ Cognisant of the deeper meanings of udgîtha, i.e. Om.
² He, though not being a Brāhmaṇa, turns out to be the only one who knows the true meaning of udgîtha, i.e. the Highest Brahman.
for I wish to hear what two Brâhmanas¹ have to say.

3. Then Silaka Sâlâvatya said to Kaikitâyana Dâlbbhya: 'Let me ask you.'
   'Ask,' he replied.

4. 'What is the origin of the Sâman?' 'Tone (svara),' he replied.
   'What is the origin of tone?' 'Breath,' he replied.
   'What is the origin of breath?' 'Food,' he replied.
   'What is the origin of food?' 'Water,' he replied.

5. 'What is the origin of water?' 'That world (heaven),' he replied.
   'And what is the origin of that world?'—
   He replied: 'Let no man carry the Sâman beyond the world of svarga (heaven). We place (recognise) the Sâman in the world of svarga, for the Sâman is extolled as svarga (heaven).'

6. Then said Silaka Sâlâvatya to Kaikitâyana Dâlbbhya: 'O Dâlbbhya, thy Sâman is not firmly established. And if any one were to say, Your head shall fall off (if you be wrong), surely your head would now fall.'

7. 'Well then, let me know this from you, Sir,' said Dâlbbhya.
   'Know it,' replied Silaka Sâlâvatya.
   'What is the origin of that world (heaven),'#
   'This world,' he replied.
   'And what is the origin of this world?'—
   He replied: 'Let no man carry the Sâman beyond this world as its rest. We place the Sâman ¹ In V.3,5, Pravâhana Gaivali is distinctly called a râganyabandhu.

in this world as its rest, for the Sâman is extolled as rest.'

8. Then said Pravâhana Gaivali to Silaka Sâlâvatya: 'Your Sâman (the earth), O Sâlâvatya, has an end. And if any one were to say, Your head shall fall off (if you be wrong), surely your head would now fall.'

'Well then, let me know this from you, Sir,' said Sâlâvatya.

'Know it,' replied Gaivali.

NINTH KHANDA.

1. 'What is the origin of this world?' 'Ether,' he replied. For all these beings take their rise from the ether, and return into the ether. Ether is older than these, ether is their rest.

2. He is indeed the udgîtha (Om = Brahman), greater than great (parovarîyas), he is without end.

He who knowing this meditates on the udgîtha, the greater than great, obtains what is greater than great, he conquers the worlds which are greater than great.

3. Atidhanvan Saunaka, having taught this udgîtha to Udara-sândilya, said: 'As long as they will know in your family this udgîtha, their life in this world will be greater than great.

4. 'And thus also will be their state in the other world.' He who thus knows the udgîtha, and meditates on it thus, his life in this world will be greater than great, and also his state in the other world, yea, in the other world.

1 Ether, or we might translate it by space, both being intended, however, as names or symbols of the Highest Brahman. See Vedânta-sûtra I, 1, 22.
TENTH KHANDA.

1. When the Kurus had been destroyed by (hail) stones, Ushasti Kākrāyana lived as a beggar with his virgin wife at Ibhyagrâma.

2. Seeing a chief eating beans, he begged of him. The chief said: 'I have no more, except those which are put away for me here.'

3. Ushasti said: 'Give me to eat of them.' He gave him the beans, and said: 'There is something to drink also.' Then said Ushasti: 'If I drank of it, I should have drunk what was left by another, and is therefore unclean.'

4. The chief said: 'Were not those beans also left over and therefore unclean?'

   'No,' he replied; 'for I should not have lived, if I had not eaten them, but the drinking of water would be mere pleasure.'

5. Having eaten himself, Ushasti gave the remaining beans to his wife. But she, having eaten before, took them and put them away.

6. Rising the next morning, Ushasti said to her: 'Alas, if we could only get some food, we might gain a little wealth. The king here is going to offer a sacrifice, he should choose me for all the priestly offices.'

1 When they had been killed either by stone weapons, or by a shower of stones, which produced a famine in the land. Comm.

2 Âlki is not the name of the wife of Ushasti, nor does it mean strong enough to travel. Saṅkara explains it as anupagâtapayodhârādistrivyāṅganâ, and Ânandagiri adds, Svairasamkâre 'pi na vyabhikārāsaṅketo darsayitum ânkyeti viseshanam. She was so young that she was allowed to run about freely, without exciting any suspicion. Another commentator says, Gṛhâd bahirgantu-marhâ anupagâtapayodharâ.

3 Or, according to the commentator, 'water I can get whenever I like.'
7. His wife said to him: 'Look, here are those beans of yours.' Having eaten them, he went to the sacrifice which was being performed.

8. He went and sat down on the orchestra near the Udgâtris, who were going to sing their hymns of praise. And he said to the Prastotri (the leader):

9. 'Prastotri, if you, without knowing the deity which belongs to the prastâva (the hymns &c. of the Prastotri), are going to sing it, your head will fall off.'

10. In the same manner he addressed the Udgâtri: 'Udgâtri, if you, without knowing the deity which belongs to the udgîtha (the hymns of the Udgâtri), are going to sing it, your head will fall off.'

11. In the same manner he addressed the Pratihartri: 'Pratihartri, if you, without knowing the deity which belongs to the pratihâra (the hymns of the Pratihartri), are going to sing it, your head will fall off.'

They stopped, and sat down in silence.

Eleventh Khanda.

1. Then the sacrificer said to him: 'I should like to know who you are, Sir.' He replied: 'I am Ushasti Kâkrâyana.'

2. He said: 'I looked for you, Sir, for all these sacrificial offices, but not finding you I chose others.'

1 The commentator is at great pains to show that a priest may officiate without knowing the secret meanings here assigned to certain parts of the sacrifice, and without running any risk of punishment. Only, if another priest is present, who is initiated, then the uninitiated, taking his place, is in danger of losing his head.

2 Should it be avittvâ, as in I. 2, 9?
3. ‘But now, Sir, take all the sacrificial offices.’
Ushasti said: ‘Very well; but let those, with my permission, perform the hymns of praise. Only as much wealth as you give to them, so much give to me also.’
The sacrificer assented.
4. Then the Prastotri approached him, saying: ‘Sir, you said to me, “Prastotri, if you, without knowing the deity which belongs to the prastâva, are going to sing it, your head will fall off,”—which then is that deity?’
5. He said: ‘Breath (prâna). For all these beings merge into breath alone, and from breath they arise. This is the deity belonging to the prastâva. If, without knowing that deity, you had sung forth your hymns, your head would have fallen off, after you had been warned by me.’
6. Then the Udgâtri approached him, saying: ‘Sir, you said to me, “Udgâtri, if you, without knowing the deity which belongs to the udgitha, are going to sing it, your head will fall off,”—which then is that deity?’
7. He said: ‘The sun (âditya). For all these beings praise the sun when it stands on high. This is the deity belonging to the udgitha. If, without knowing that deity, you had sung out your hymns, your head would have fallen off, after you had been warned by me.’
8. Then the Pratihartri approached him, saying: ‘Sir, you said to me, “Pratihartri, if you, without knowing the deity belonging to the pratihâra, are going to sing it, your head will fall off,’—which then is that deity?’
9. He said: ‘Food (anna). For all these beings live when they partake of food. This is the deity belonging to the pratihāra. If, without knowing that deity, you had sung your hymns, your head would have fallen off, after you had been warned by me.

Twelfth Khanda.

1. Now follows the udgītha of the dogs. Vaka Dālbhya, or, as he was also called, Glāva Maitreya, went out to repeat the Veda (in a quiet place).

2. A white (dog) appeared before him, and other dogs gathering round him, said to him: 'Sir, sing and get us food, we are hungry.'

3. The white dog said to them: 'Come to me to-morrow morning.' Vaka Dālbhya, or, as he was also called, Glāva Maitreya, watched.

4. The dogs came on, holding together, each dog keeping the tail of the preceding dog in his mouth, as the priests do when they are going to sing praises with the Vahishpavamāna hymn. After they had settled down, they began to say Hiṅ.

5. 'Om, let us eat! Om, let us drink! Om, may the divine Varuna, Pragâpati, Savitri bring us food! Lord of food, bring hither food, bring it, Om!'

---

1 There are certain etymological fancies for assigning each deity to a certain portion of the Sāma-veda ceremonial. Thus prāna is assigned to the prastāva, because both words begin with pra. Āditya is assigned to the udgītha, because the sun is ut. Anna, food, is assigned to the pratihāra, because food is taken, prathriyate, &c.

2 This alludes to a ceremony where the priests have to walk in procession, each priest holding the gown of the preceding priest.

3 The commentator explains Varuna and Pragâpati as epithets of Savitri, or the sun, meaning rain-giver and man-protector.
THIRTEENTH KHANDA.

1. The syllable Hau² is this world (the earth), the syllable Hai³ the air, the syllable Atha the moon, the syllable Iha the self, the syllable Í⁴ is Agni, fire.

2. The syllable Ú is the sun, the syllable E is the Nihava or invocation, the syllable Auhoi⁵ is the Visve Devas, the syllable Hiñ is Pragâpati, Svara⁶ (tone) is breath (prâna), the syllable Yà is food, the syllable Vâg⁷ is Virâg.

3. The thirteenth stobha syllable, viz. the indistinct syllable Hun, is the Undefinable (the Highest Brahman).

4. Speech yields the milk, which is the milk of speech itself to him who knows this Upanishad (secret doctrine) of the Sâmans in this wise. He becomes rich in food, and able to eat food⁸,—yea, able to eat food.

¹ The syllables here mentioned are the so-called stobhâksha-ras, sounds used in the musical recitation of the Sâman hymns, probably to fill out the intervals in the music for which there were no words in the hymns. These syllables are marked in the MSS. of the Sâma-veda, but their exact character and purpose are not quite clear.

² A stobha syllable used in the Rathantara Sâman.

³ Used in the Vâmadevya Sâman.

⁴ The Sâman addressed to Agni takes the syllable Í as nidhana.

⁵ The stobha syllables used in the Sâman addressed to the Visve Devas.

⁷ The commentator takes vâg as a stobha, as a syllable occurring in hymns addressed to Virâg, and as implying either the deity Virâg or food.

⁸ I.e. wealthy and healthy.
SECOND PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Meditation on the whole of the Sâman is good, and people, when anything is good, say it is Sâman; when it is not good, it is not Sâman.

2. Thus they also say, he approached him with Sâman, i.e. becomingly; and he approached him without Sâman, i.e. unbecomingly.

3. And they also say, truly this is Sâman for us, i.e. it is good for us, when it is good; and truly that is not Sâman for us, i.e. it is not good for us, when it is not good.

4. If any one knowing this meditates on the Sâman as good, depend upon it all good qualities will approach quickly, aye, they will become his own.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sâman as the five worlds. The hiṅkāra is the earth, the prastâva the fire, the udgîtha the sky, the pratiḥāra the sun, the nidhana heaven; so in an ascending line.

2. In a descending line, the hiṅkāra is heaven,

---

1 Hitherto meditation on certain portions only of the Sâma-veda and the Sâma-sacrifice had been enjoined, and their deeper meaning explained. Now the same is done for the whole of the Sâman.

3 The five forms in which the Sâman is used for sacrificial purposes. The Sâman is always to be understood as the Good, as Dharma, and as Brahman.
the prastāva the sun, the udgitha the sky, the pratihāra the fire, the nidhana the earth.

3. The worlds in an ascending and in a descending line belong to him who knowing this meditates on the fivefold Sāman as the worlds.

THIRD KHANDA.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman as rain. The hiṅkāra is wind (that brings the rain); the prastāva is, 'the cloud is come;' the udgitha is, 'it rains;' the pratihāra, 'it flashes, it thunders;'

2. The nidhana is, 'it stops.' There is rain for him, and he brings rain for others who thus knowing meditates on the fivefold Sāman as rain.

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman in all waters. When the clouds gather, that is the hiṅkāra; when it rains, that is the prastāva; that which flows in the east, that is the udgitha; that which flows in the west, that is the pratihāra; the sea is the nidhana.

2. He does not die in water, nay, he is rich in

---

1 The commentator supplies some fanciful reasons why each of the five Sāmans is identified with certain objects. Earth is said to be the hiṅkāra, because both always come first. Agni is prastāva, because sacrifices are praised in the fire (prastūyante). The sky is udgitha, because it is also called gagana, and both words have the letter g in common. The sun is pratihāra, because everybody wishes the sun to come towards him (prati). Heaven is nidhana, because those who depart from here are placed there (nidhi-yante), &c.

3 The Narmadā, &c. Comm.

4 The commentator adds, 'unless he wishes to die in the Ganges.'
water who knowing this meditates on the fivefold Sāman as all waters.

Fifth Khanda.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman as the seasons. The hiṅkāra is spring, the prastāva summer (harvest of yava, &c.), the udgītha the rainy season, the pratihāra autumn, the nidhana winter.

2. The seasons belong to him, nay, he is always in season (successful) who knowing this meditates on the fivefold Sāman as the seasons.

Sixth Khanda.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman in animals. The hiṅkāra is goats, the prastāva sheep, the udgītha cows, the pratihāra horses, the nidhana man.

2. Animals belong to him, nay, he is rich in animals who knowing this meditates on the fivefold Sāman as animals.

Seventh Khanda.

1. Let a man meditate on the fivefold Sāman, which is greater than great, as the prânas (senses). The hiṅkāra is smell\(^1\) (nose), the prastāva speech (tongue), the udgītha sight (eye), the pratihāra hearing (ear), the nidhana mind. These are one greater than the other.

2. What is greater than great belongs to him, nay, he conquers the worlds which are greater than

---

\(^1\) Prâna is explained by ghrâna, smell; possibly ghrâna may have been the original reading. Anyhow, it cannot be the mukhya prâna here, because it is distinctly represented as the lowest sense.
great, who knowing this meditates on the fivefold Sâman, which is greater than great, as the prânas (senses).

Eighth Khanda.

1. Next for the sevenfold Sâman. Let a man meditate on the sevenfold Sâman in speech. Whenever there is in speech the syllable huīn\(^1\), that is hiîkâra, pra is the prastâva, â is the âdi, the first, i. e. Om,

2. Ud is the udgitha, pra the pratihâra, upa the upadrava, ni the nidhana.

3. Speech yields the milk, which is the milk of speech itself, to him who knowing this meditates on the sevenfold Sâman in speech. He becomes rich in food, and able to eat food.

Ninth Khanda.

1. Let a man meditate on the sevenfold Sâman as the sun. The sun is Sâman, because he is always the same (sama); he is Sâman because he is the same, everybody thinking he looks towards me, he looks towards me\(^2\).

2. Let him know that all beings are dependent on him (the sun). What he is before his rising, that is the hiîkâra. On it animals are dependent. Therefore animals say hiî (before sunrise), for they share the hiîkâra of that Sâman (the sun).

3. What he is when first risen, that is the prastâva. On it men are dependent. Therefore men love praise (prastuti) and celebrity, for they share the prastâva of that Sâman.

---

1 These are again the stobhâksharas, or musical syllables used in the performance of the Sâman hymns; see p. 22.

4. What he is at the time of the saṅgava\(^1\), that is the ādi, the first, the Om. On it birds are dependent. Therefore birds fly about in the sky without support, holding themselves, for they share the ādi\(^2\) (the Om) of that Sâman.

5. What he is just at noon, that is the udgîthâ. On it the Devas are dependent (because they are brilliant). Therefore they are the best of all the descendants of Pragâpati, for they share the udgîthâ of that Sâman.

6. What he is after midday and before afternoon, that is the pratihâra. On it all germs are dependent. Therefore these, having been conceived (pratih\(r\)ita), do not fall, for they share the pratihâra of that Sâman.

7. What he is after the afternoon and before sunset, that is the upadrava. On it the animals of the forest are dependent. Therefore, when they see a man, they run (upadravanti) to the forest as a safe hiding-place, for they share the upadrava of that Sâman.

8. What he is when he first sets, that is the nidhana. On it the fathers are dependent. Therefore they put them\(^3\) down (nidadhati), for they share the nidhana of that Sâman. Thus a man meditates on the sevenfold Sâman as the sun.

---

1 When the sun puts forth his rays, and when the cows are together with their calves, i.e. as Rajendralal Mitra says, after the cows have been milked and are allowed by the cowherds to suckle their young.

2 The tertium comparationis is here the ā of ādi and the ā of ādāya, i.e. holding. The d might have been added.

3 The cakes for the ancestral spirits, or the spirits themselves.
Tenth Khanda.

1. Next let a man meditate on the sevenfold Sâman which is uniform in itself and leads beyond death. The word hiṅkâra has three syllables, the word prastâva has three syllables: that is equal (sama).

2. The word âdi (first, Om) has two syllables, the word pratihâra has four syllables. Taking one syllable from that over, that is equal (sama).

3. The word udgitha has three syllables, the word upadrava has four syllables. With three and three syllables it should be equal. One syllable being left over, it becomes trisyllabic. Hence it is equal.

4. The word nidhana has three syllables, therefore it is equal. These make twenty-two syllables.

5. With twenty-one syllables a man reaches the sun (and death), for the sun is the twenty-first from here; with the twenty-second he conquers what is beyond the sun: that is blessedness, that is freedom from grief.

6. He obtains here the victory over the sun (death), and there is a higher victory than the victory over the sun for him, who knowing this meditates on the sevenfold Sâman as uniform in itself, which leads beyond death, yea, which leads beyond death.

Eleventh Khanda. 3

1. The hiṅkâra is mind, the prastâva speech, the udgitha sight, the pratihâra hearing, the nidhana

---

1 Atmasammita is explained by the commentator either as having the same number of syllables in the names of the different Sâmans, or as equal to the Highest Self.

2 There are twelve months, five seasons, three worlds, then follows the sun as the twenty-first. Comm.

3 After having explained the secret meaning of the whole Sâmabreath. That is the Gāyatra Sāman, as interwoven in the (five) prānas¹.

2. He who thus knows this Gāyatra interwoven in the prānas, keeps his senses, reaches the full life, he lives long ², becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. The rule of him who thus meditates on the Gāyatra is, 'Be not high-minded.'

Twelfth Khanda.

1. The hiṅkāra is, he rubs (the fire-stick); the prastāva, smoke rises; the udgitha, it burns; the pratihāra, there are glowing coals; the nidhana, it goes down; the nidhana, it is gone out. This is the Rathantara Sāman as interwoven in fire ³.

2. He who thus knows this Rathantara interwoven in fire, becomes radiant ⁴ and strong. He reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. The rule is, 'Do not rinse the mouth or spit before the fire.'

Thirteenth Khanda.

1, 2. Next follows the Vāmadevya as interwoven in generation ⁵.

veda ceremonial, as it is to be understood by meditation only (dhyāna), he proceeds to explain the secret meaning of the same ceremonial, giving to each its proper name in proper succession (gāyatra, rathantara, &c.), and showing the hidden purport of those names.

¹ Cf. Kh. Up. II, 7, 1, where prāna is explained differently. The Gāyatrī itself is sometimes called prāna.

² The commentator generally takes gyok in the sense of bright.

³ The Rathantara is used for the ceremony of producing fire.

⁴ Brahmvārakāsa is the 'glory of countenance' produced by higher knowledge, an inspired look. Annāda, lit. able to eat, healthy, strong.

⁵ Upamantrayate sa hiṅkāro, gñāpayate sa prastāvah, striyā saha
FOURTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Rising, the sun is the hiṅkāra, risen, he is the prastāva, at noon he is the udgītha, in the afternoon he is the pratihāra, setting, he is the nidhana. That is the Bṛhat Sāman as interwoven in the sun 1.

2. He who thus knows the Bṛhat as interwoven in the sun, becomes refulgent 2 and strong, he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, 'Never complain of the heat of the sun.'

FIFTEENTH KHANDA.

1. The mists gather, that is the hiṅkāra; the cloud has risen, that is the prastāva; it rains, that is the udgītha; it flashes and thunders, that is the pratihāra; it stops, that is the nidhana. That is the Vairūpa Sāman, as interwoven in Parganya, the god of rain.

2. He who thus knows the Vairūpa as interwoven in Parganya, obtains all kinds of cattle (virūpa), he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, 'Never complain of the rain.'

SIXTEENTH KHANDA.

1. The hiṅkāra is spring, the prastāva summer, the udgītha the rainy season, the pratihāra autumn,

2. He who thus knows the Vairūpa as interwoven in Parganya, obtains all kinds of cattle (virūpa), he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, 'Never complain of the rain.'

1 The sun is Bṛhat. The Bṛhat Sāman is to be looked upon as the sun, or the Bṛhat has Aditya for its deity.

2 The same as brahmavarkasīn.
The nidhana winter. That is the Vairâga Sàman, as interwoven in the seasons.

2. He who thus knows the Vairâga, as interwoven in the seasons, shines (virâgati) through children, cattle, and glory of countenance. He reaches the full life, he lives long; becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, ‘Never complain of the seasons.’

Seventeenth Khanda.

1. The hiṅkâra is the earth, the prastâva the sky, the udgîtha heaven, the pratihâra the regions, the nidhana the sea. These are the Sakvari Sâmans, as interwoven in the worlds ¹.

2. He who thus knows the Sakvaris, as interwoven in the worlds, becomes possessed of the worlds, he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, ‘Never complain of the worlds.’

Eighteenth Khanda.

1. The hiṅkâra is goats, the prastâva sheep, the udgîtha cows, the pratihâra horses, the nidhana man. These are the Revatî Sâmans, as interwoven in animals.

2. He who thus knows these Revatîs, as interwoven in animals, becomes rich in animals ², he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, ‘Never complain of animals.’

¹ The Sakvarîs are sung with the Mahânâmnîs. These are said to be water, and the worlds are said to rest on water.

² Revat means rich.
Nineteenth Khanda.

1. The hiṅkāra is hair, the prastāva skin, the udgitha flesh, the pratihāra bone, the nidhana marrow. That is the Yagñāyagñīya Sāman, as interwoven in the members of the body.

2. He who thus knows the Yagñāyagñīya, as interwoven in the members of the body, becomes possessed of strong limbs, he is not crippled in any limb, he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, 'Do not eat marrow for a year,' or 'Do not eat marrow at all.'

Twentieth Khanda.

1. The hiṅkāra is fire, the prastāva air, the udgitha the sun, the pratihāra the stars, the nidhana the moon. That is the Rāgana Sāman, as interwoven in the deities.

2. He who thus knows the Rāgana, as interwoven in the deities, obtains the same world, the same happiness, the same company as the gods, he reaches the full life, he lives long, becomes great with children and cattle, great by fame. His rule is, 'Do not speak evil of the Brāhmaṇas.'

Twenty-first Khanda.

1. The hiṅkāra is the threefold knowledge, the prastāva these three worlds, the udgitha Agni (fire), Vāyu (air), and Āditya (sun), the pratihāra the stars, the birds, and the rays, the nidhana the serpents, Gandharvas, and fathers. That is the Sāman, as interwoven in everything.

2. He who thus knows this Sāman, as interwoven in everything, he becomes everything.
3. And thus it is said in the following verse: 'There are the fivefold three (the three kinds of sacrificial knowledge, the three worlds &c. in their fivefold form, i.e. as identified with the hiṅkāra, the prastāva, &c.), and the other forms of the Sāman. Greater than these there is nothing else besides.'

4. He who knows this, knows everything. All regions offer him gifts. His rule is, 'Let him meditate (on the Sāman), knowing that he is everything, yea, that he is everything.'

Twenty-second Khanda.

1. The udgitha, of which a poet said, I choose the deep sounding note of the Sāman as good for cattle, belongs to Agni; the indefinite note belongs to Pragâpati, the definite note to Soma, the soft and smooth note to Vāyu, the smooth and strong note to Indra, the heron-like note to Brîhaspati, the dull note to Varuna. Let a man cultivate all of these, avoiding, however, that of Varuna.

2. Let a man sing, wishing to obtain by his song immortality for the Devas. 'May I obtain by my song oblations (svadhā) for the fathers, hope for men, fodder and water for animals, heaven for the sacrificer, food for myself,' thus reflecting on these in his mind, let a man (Udgâtri priest) sing praises, without making mistakes in pronunciation, &c.

---

1 Here ends the Sāmopāsana.

2 These are lucubrations on the different tones employed in singing the Sāman hymns, and their names, such as vinardi, anirukta, nirukta, mridu slakshna, slakshna balavad, krauñā, apadhvānta.

3 It would be better if the first ity āgâyet could be left out. The commentator ignores these words.
3. All vowels (svara) belong to Indra, all sibilants (ūshman) to Pragāpati, all consonants (sparsa) to Mrityu (death). If somebody should reprove him for his vowels, let him say, 'I went to Indra as my refuge (when pronouncing my vowels): he will answer thee.'

4. And if somebody should reprove him for his sibilants, let him say, 'I went to Pragāpati as my refuge: he will smash thee.' And if somebody should reprove him for his consonants, let him say, 'I went to Mrityu as my refuge: he will reduce thee to ashes.'

5. All vowels are to be pronounced, with voice (ghosha) and strength (bala), so that the Udgātri may give strength to Indra. All sibilants are to be pronounced, neither as if swallowed (agrasta), nor as if thrown out (nirasta), but well opened (vivr̥ta), so that the Udgātri may give himself to Pragāpati. All consonants are to be pronounced slowly, and without crowding them together, so that the Udgātri may withdraw himself from Mrityu.

---

1 Grasa, according to the Rig-veda-pratîṣākhya 766, is the stiffening of the root of the tongue in pronunciation.
2 Nirasa, according to the Rig-veda-pratîṣākhya 760, is the withdrawing of the active from the passive organ in pronunciation.
3 The opening, vivr̥ta, may mean two things, either the opening of the vocal chords (kha), which imparts to the ūshmans their surd character (Rig. Prat. 709), or the opening of the organs of pronunciation (karana), which for the ūshmans is aspr̥śham sthitam (Rig. Prat. 719), or vivr̥ta (Ath. Prat. I, 31; Taitt. Prat. II, 5).
4 Anabhinihita, for thus the commentaries give the reading, is explained by anabhunikshipta. On the real abhinidhana, see Rig. Prat. 393. The translation does not follow the commentary. The genitive pragāpatek is governed by paridadāni.
Twenty-third Khanda.

1. There are three branches of the law. Sacrifice, study, and charity are the first 1,

2. Austerity the second, and to dwell as a Brahmaśārīn in the house of a tutor, always mortifying the body in the house of a tutor, is the third. All these obtain the worlds of the blessed; but the Brahmaśamstha alone (he who is firmly grounded in Brahman) obtains immortality.

3. Pragāpati brooded on the worlds. From them, thus brooded on, the threefold knowledge (sacrifice) issued forth. He brooded on it, and from it, thus brooded on, issued the three syllables, Bhūḥ, Bhuvaḥ, Svāḥ.

4. He brooded on them, and from them, thus brooded on, issued the Om. As all leaves are attached to a stalk, so is all speech (all words) attached to the Om (Brahman). Om is all this, yea, Om is all this.

Twenty-fourth Khanda.

1. The teachers of Brahman (Veda) declare, as the Prāthaḥ-savana (morning-oblation) belongs to the Vasus, the Mādhyandina-savana (noon-libation) to

---

1 Not the first in rank or succession, but only in enumerating the three branches of the law. This first branch corresponds to the second stage, the āśrama of the householder. Austerity is meant for the Vānaprastha, the third āśrama, while the third is intended for the Brahmaśārīn, the student, only that the naishāṭika or perpetual Brahmaśārīn here takes the place of the ordinary student. The Brahmaśamstha would represent the fourth āśrama, that of the Sannyāsin or parivṛg, who has ceased to perform any works, even the tapas or austerities of the Vānaprastha.
the Rudras, the third Savana (evening-libation) to the Âdityas and the Visve Devas,

2. Where then is the world of the sacrificer? He who does not know this, how can he perform the sacrifice? He only who knows, should perform it.\(^1\)

3. Before the beginning of the Prátaranuvâka (matin-chant), the sacrificer, sitting down behind the household altar (gârhapatya), and looking towards the north, sings the Sâman, addressed to the Vasus:

4. 'Open the door of the world (the earth), let us see thee, that we may rule (on earth).'

5. Then he sacrifices, saying: 'Adoration to Agni, who dwells on the earth, who dwells in the world! Obtain that world for me, the sacrificer! That is the world for the sacrificer!'

6. 'I (the sacrificer) shall go thither, when this life is over. Take this! (he says, in offering the libation.) Cast back the bolt!' Having said this, he rises. For him the Vasus fulfil the morning-oblation.

7. Before the beginning of the Mâdhyandina-savana, the noon-oblation, the sacrificer, sitting down behind the Âgnidhriya altar, and looking towards the north, sings the Sâman, addressed to the Rudras:

8. 'Open the door of the world (the sky), let us see thee, that we may rule wide (in the sky).'

9. Then he sacrifices, saying: 'Adoration to

---

\(^1\) The commentator is always very anxious to explain that though it is better that a priest should know the hidden meaning of the sacrificial acts which he has to perform, yet there is nothing to prevent a priest, who has not yet arrived at this stage of knowledge, from performing his duties.
Vāyu (air), who dwells in the sky, who dwells in the world. Obtain that world for me, the sacrificer! That is the world for the sacrificer!'

10. 'I (the sacrificer) shall go thither, when this life is over. Take this! Cast back the bolt!' Having said this, he rises. For him the Rudras fulfil the noon-oblation.

11. Before the beginning of the third oblation, the sacrificer, sitting down behind the Āhavanīya altar, and looking towards the north, sings the Sāman, addressed to the Ādityas and Visv Devas:

12. 'Open the door of the world (the heaven), let us see thee, that we may rule supreme (in heaven).' This is addressed to the Ādityas.

13. Next the Sāman addressed to the Visv Devas: 'Open the door of the world (heaven), let us see thee, that we may rule supreme (in heaven).'

14. Then he sacrifices, saying: 'Adoration to the Ādityas and to the Visv Devas, who dwell in heaven, who dwell in the world. Obtain that world for me, the sacrificer!'

15. 'That is the world for the sacrificer! I (the sacrificer) shall go thither, when this life is over. Take this! Cast back the bolt!' Having said this, he rises.

16. For him the Ādityas and the Visv Devas fulfil the third oblation. He who knows this, knows the full measure of the sacrifice, yea, he knows it.
THIRD PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANDA 1.

1. The sun is indeed the honey 2 of the Devas. The heaven is the cross-beam (from which) the sky (hangs as) a hive, and the bright vapours are the eggs of the bees 3.

2. The eastern rays of the sun are the honey-cells in front. The Rik verses are the bees, the Rig-veda (sacrifice) is the flower, the water (of the sacrificial libations) is the nectar (of the flower).

3. Those very Rik verses then (as bees) brooded over the Rig-veda sacrifice (the flower); and from it, thus brooded on, sprang as its (nectar) essence, fame, glory of countenance, vigour, strength, and health 4.

4. That (essence) flowed forth and went towards the sun 5. And that forms what we call the red (rohita) light of the rising sun.

---

1 After the various meditations on the Sâma-veda sacrifice, the sun is next to be meditated on, as essential to the performance of all sacrifices.

2 Everybody delights in the sun, as the highest reward of all sacrifices.

3 I am not certain whether this passage is rightly translated. Rajendralal Mitra speaks of an arched bamboo, whence the atmosphere hangs pendant like a hive, in which the vapours are the eggs. Apûpa means a cake, and may mean a hive. In order to understand the simile, we ought to have a clearer idea of the construction of the ancient bee-hive.

4 Annâdyâ, explained as food, but more likely meaning power to eat, appetite, health. See III, 13, 1.

5 The commentator explains: The Rik verses, on becoming part of the ceremonial, perform the sacrifice. The sacrifice (the flower), when surrounded by the Rik verses (bees), yields its essence, the nectar. That essence consists in all the rewards to be obtained through sacrifice, and as these rewards are to be enjoyed in the
SECOND KHANDA.

1. The southern rays of the sun are the honey-cells on the right. The Yagus verses are the bees, the Yagur-veda sacrifice is the flower, the water (of the sacrificial libations) is the nectar (of the flower).

2. Those very Yagus verses (as bees) brooded over the Yagur-veda sacrifice (the flower); and from it, thus brooded on, sprang as its (nectar) essence, fame, glory of countenance, vigour, strength, and health.

3. That flowed forth and went towards the sun. And that forms what we call the white (sukla) light of the sun.

THIRD KHANDA.

1. The western rays of the sun are the honey-cells behind. The Sāman verses are the bees, the Sāma-veda sacrifice is the flower, the water is the nectar.

2. Those very Sāman verses (as bees) brooded over the Sāma-veda sacrifice; and from it, thus brooded on, sprang as its (nectar) essence, fame, glory of countenance, vigour, strength, and health.

3. That flowed forth and went towards the sun. And that forms what we call the dark (krishna) light of the sun.

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. The northern rays of the sun are the honey-cells on the left. The (hymns of the) Atharvāṅgiras are the bees, the Itihāsa-purāṇa¹ (the reading of the old stories) is the flower, the water is the nectar.

next world and in the sun, therefore that essence or nectar is said to ascend to the sun.

¹ As there is no Atharva-veda sacrifice, properly so-called, we have corresponding to the Atharva-veda hymns the so-called fifth
2. Those very hymns of the Atharvâṅgiras (as bees) brooded over the Itihasa-purâna; and from it, thus brooded on, sprang as its (nectar) essence, fame, glory of countenance, vigour, strength, and health.

3. That flowed forth, and went towards the sun. And that forms what we call the extreme dark (parah krishnam) light of the sun.

Fifth Khanda.

1. The upward rays of the sun are the honey-cells above. The secret doctrines are the bees, Brahman (the Om) is the flower, the water is the nectar.

2. Those secret doctrines (as bees) brooded over Brahman (the Om); and from it, thus brooded on, sprang as its (nectar) essence, fame, glory of countenance, brightness, vigour, strength, and health.

3. That flowed forth, and went towards the sun. And that forms what seems to stir in the centre of the sun.

4. These (the different colours in the sun) are the essences of the essences. For the Vedas are essences (the best things in the world); and of them (after they have assumed the form of sacrifice) these (the colours rising to the sun) are again the essences. They are the nectar of the nectar. For the Vedas are nectar (immortal), and of them these are the nectar.

Veda, the Itihasa-purâna. This may mean the collection of legends and traditions, or the old book of traditions. At all events it is taken as one Purâna, not as many. These ancient stories were repeated at the Asvamedha sacrifice during the so-called Pariplava nights. Many of them have been preserved in the Brâhmanas; others, in a more modern form, in the Mahâbhârata. See Weber, Indische Studien, I, p. 258, note.
SIXTH KHANDA.

1. On the first of these nectars (the red light, which represents fame, glory of countenance, vigour, strength, health) the Vasus live, with Agni at their head. True, the Devas do not eat or drink, but they enjoy by seeing the nectar.

2. They enter into that (red) colour, and they rise from that colour 1.

3. He who thus knows this nectar, becomes one of the Vasus, with Agni at their head, he sees the nectar and rejoices. And he, too, having entered that colour, rises again from that colour.

4. So long as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west 2, so long does he follow the sovereign supremacy of the Vasus.

SEVENTH KHANDA.

1. On the second of these nectars the Rudras live, with Indra at their head. True, the Devas do not eat or drink, but they enjoy by seeing the nectar.

2. They enter into that white colour, and they rise from that colour.

3. He who thus knows this nectar, becomes one of the Rudras, with Indra at their head, he sees the

---

1 This is differently explained by the commentator. He takes it to mean that, when the Vasus have gone to the sun, and see that there is no opportunity for enjoying that colour, they rest; but when they see that there is an opportunity for enjoying it, they exert themselves for it. I think the colour is here taken for the colour of the morning, which the Vasus enter, and from which they go forth again.

nectar and rejoices. And he, having entered that colour, rises again from that colour.

4. So long as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, twice as long does it rise in the south and set in the north; and so long does he follow the sovereign supremacy of the Rudras.

Eighth Khanda.

1. On the third of these nectars the Adityas live, with Varuna at their head. True, the Devas do not eat or drink, but they enjoy by seeing the nectar.

2. They enter into that (dark) colour, and they rise from that colour.

3. He who thus knows this nectar, becomes one of the Adityas, with Varuna at their head, he sees the nectar and rejoices. And he, having entered that colour, rises again from that colour.

4. So long as the sun rises in the south and sets in the north, twice as long does it rise in the west and set in the east; and so long does he follow the sovereign supremacy of the Adityas.

Ninth Khanda.

1. On the fourth of these nectars the Maruts live, with Soma at their head. True, the Devas do not eat or drink, but they enjoy by seeing the nectar.

2. They enter into that (very dark) colour, and they rise from that colour.

3. He who thus knows this nectar, becomes one of the Maruts, with Soma at their head, he sees the nectar and rejoices. And he, having entered that colour, rises again from that colour.

4. So long as the sun rises in the west and sets in the east, twice as long does it rise in the north and set in the south; and so long does he follow the sovereign supremacy of the Maruts.

Tenth Khanda.

1. On the fifth of these nectars the Sādhyas live, with Brahman at their head. True, the Devas do not eat or drink, but they enjoy by seeing the nectar.

2. They enter into that colour, and they rise from that colour.

3. He who thus knows this nectar, becomes one of the Sādhyas, with Brahman at their head; he sees the nectar and rejoices. And he, having entered that colour, rises again from that colour.

4. So long as the sun rises in the north and sets in the south, twice as long does it rise above, and set below; and so long does he follow the sovereign power of the Sādhyas.

---

1 The meaning of the five Khandas from 6 to 10 is clear, in so far as they are intended to show that he who knows or meditates on the sacrifices as described before, enjoys his reward in different worlds with the Vasus, Rudras, &c. for certain periods of time, till at last he reaches the true Brahman. Of these periods each succeeding one is supposed to be double the length of the preceding one. This is expressed by imagining a migration of the sun from east to south, west, north, and zenith. Each change of the sun marks a new world, and the duration of each successive world is computed as double the duration of the preceding world. Similar ideas have been more fully developed in the Purānas, and the commentator is at great pains to remove apparent contradictions between the Paurānik and Vaidik accounts, following, as Ānandagīñnagiri remarks, the Dravidākārya (p. 173, l. 13).
Eleventh Khanda.

1. When from thence he has risen upwards, he neither rises nor sets. He is alone, standing in the centre. And on this there is this verse:

2. ‘Yonder he neither rises nor sets at any time. If this is not true, ye gods, may I lose Brahman.’

3. And indeed to him who thus knows this Brahma-uperishad (the secret doctrine of the Veda) the sun does not rise and does not set. For him there is day, once and for all.

4. This doctrine (beginning with III, 1, 1) Brahman (m. Hiranyagarbha) told to Pragâpati (Virâg), Pragâpati to Manu, Manu to his offspring (Ikshvâku, &c.) And the father told that (doctrine of) Brahman (n.) to Uddálaka Árunî.

5. A father may therefore tell that doctrine of Brahman to his eldest son, or to a worthy pupil.

But no one should tell it to anybody else, even if he gave him the whole sea-girt earth, full of treasure, for this doctrine is worth more than that, yea, it is worth more.

Twelfth Khanda.

1. The Gâyatrî (verse) is everything whatsoever here exists. Gâyatrî indeed is speech, for speech

---
2 This was the old, not the present custom, says Ánandagiri. Not the father, but an âkârya, has now to teach his pupils.
3 The Gâyatrî is one of the sacred metres, and is here to be meditated on as Brahman. It is used in the sense of verse, and as the name of a famous hymn. The Gâyatrî is often praised as the most powerful metre, and whatever can be obtained by means of the recitation of Gâyatrî verses is described as the achievement of the Gâyatrî. The etymology of gâyatrî from gai and trâ is, of course, fanciful.
sings forth (gāya-ti) and protects (trāya-te) everything that here exists.

2. That Gāyatrī is also the earth, for everything that here exists rests on the earth, and does not go beyond.

3. That earth again is the body in man, for in it the vital airs (prānas, which are everything) rest, and do not go beyond.

4. That body again in man is the heart within man, for in it the prānas (which are everything) rest, and do not go beyond.

5. That Gāyatrī has four feet and is sixfold. And this is also declared by a Rik verse (Rig-veda X, 90, 3):

6. 'Such is the greatness of it (of Brahman, under the disguise of Gāyatrī); greater than it is the Person (purusha). His feet are all things. The immortal with three feet is in heaven (i.e. in himself).'

1 The prānas may be meant for the five senses, as explained in Kh. I, 2, 1; II, 7, 1; or for the five breathings, as explained immediately afterwards in III, 13, 1. The commentator sees in them everything that here exists (Kh. Up. III, 15, 4), and thus establishes the likeness between the body and the Gāyatrī. As Gāyatrī is the earth, and the earth the body, and the body the heart, Gāyatrī is in the end to be considered as the heart.

2 The four feet are explained as the four quarters of the Gāyatrī metre, of six syllables each. The Gāyatrī really consists of three feet of eight syllables each.

3 The Gāyatrī has been identified with all beings, with speech, earth, body, heart, and the vital airs, and is therefore called sixfold. This, at least, is the way in which the commentator accounts for the epithet 'sixfold.'

4 Of Brahman modified as Gāyatrī, having four feet, and being sixfold.

5 The real Brahman, unmodified by form and name.
7. The Brahman which has been thus described (as immortal with three feet in heaven, and as Gâyatrî) is the same as the ether which is around us;

8. And the ether which is around us, is the same as the ether which is within us. And the ether which is within us,

9. That is the ether within the heart. That ether in the heart (as Brahman) is omnipresent and unchanging. He who knows this obtains omnipresent and unchangeable happiness.

Thirteenth Khanda

1. For that heart there are five gates belonging to the Devas (the senses). The eastern gate is the Prâna (up-breathing), that is the eye, that is Âditya (the sun). Let a man meditate on that as brightness (glory of countenance) and health. He who knows this, becomes bright and healthy.

2. The southern gate is the Vyâna (back-breathing), that is the ear, that is the moon. Let a man meditate on that as happiness and fame. He who knows this, becomes happy and famous.

3. The western gate is the Apâna (down-breathing), that is speech, that is Agni (fire). Let a man meditate on that as glory of countenance and health. He who knows this, becomes glorious and healthy.

4. The northern gate is the Samâna (on-breathing), that is mind, that is Parganya (rain). Let a man meditate on that as celebrity and beauty.

---

1 The meditation on the five gates and the five gate-keepers of the heart is meant to be subservient to the meditation on Brahman, as the ether in the heart, which, as it is said at the end, is actually seen and heard by the senses as being within the heart.
He who knows this, becomes celebrated and beautiful.

5. The upper gate is the Udāna (out-breathing), that is air, that is ether. Let a man meditate on that as strength and greatness. He who knows this, becomes strong and great.

6. These are the five men of Brahman, the door-keepers of the Svarga (heaven) world. He who knows these five men of Brahman, the door-keepers of the Svarga world, in his family a strong son is born. He who thus knows these five men of Brahman, as the door-keepers of the Svarga world, enters himself the Svarga world.

7. Now that light which shines above this heaven, higher than all, higher than everything, in the highest world, beyond which there are no other worlds, that is the same light which is within man. And of this we have this visible proof:

8. Namely, when we thus perceive by touch the warmth here in the body. And of it we have this audible proof: Namely, when we thus, after stopping our ears, listen to what is like the rolling of a carriage, or the bellowing of an ox, or the sound of a burning fire (within the ears). Let a man meditate on this as the (Brahman) which is seen and heard.

———

1 The presence of Brahman in the heart of man is not to rest on the testimony of revelation only, but is here to be established by the evidence of the senses. Childish as the argument may seem to us, it shows at all events how intently the old Brahman thought on the problem of the evidence of the invisible.

2 That warmth must come from something, just as smoke comes from fire, and this something is supposed to be Brahman in the heart.

He who knows this, becomes conspicuous and celebrated, yea, he becomes celebrated.

FOURTEENTH KHANDA.

1. All this is Brahman (n.) Let a man meditate on that (visible world) as beginning, ending, and breathing¹ in it (the Brahman).

Now man is a creature of will. According to what his will is in this world, so will he be when he has departed this life. Let him therefore have this will and belief:

2. The intelligent, whose body is spirit, whose form is light, whose thoughts are true, whose nature is like ether (omnipresent and invisible), from whom all works, all desires, all sweet odours and tastes proceed; he who embraces all this, who never speaks, and is never surprised,

3. He is my self within the heart, smaller than a corn of rice, smaller than a corn of barley, smaller than a mustard seed, smaller than a canary seed or the kernel of a canary seed. He also is my self within the heart, greater than the earth, greater than the sky, greater than heaven, greater than all these worlds.

4. He from whom all works, all desires, all sweet odours and tastes proceed, who embraces all this, who never speaks and who is never surprised, he, my self within the heart, is that Brahman (n.) When I shall have departed from hence, I shall obtain him (that Self). He who has this faith ² has no doubt; thus said Sândîlya³, yea, thus he said.

¹ Galân is explained by ga, born, la, absorbed, and an, breathing. It is an artificial term, but fully recognised by the Vedánta school, and always explained in this manner.
² Or he who has faith and no doubt, will obtain this.
³ This chapter is frequently quoted as the Sândîlya-vidyâ, Vedântasâra, init; Vedânta-sûtra III, 3. 31.
Fifteenth Khanda

1. The chest which has the sky for its circumference and the earth for its bottom, does not decay, for the quarters are its sides, and heaven its lid above. That chest is a treasury, and all things are within it.

2. Its eastern quarter is called Guhû, its southern Sahamânâ, its western Râgû, its northern Subhûtâ. The child of those quarters is Vâyu, the air, and he who knows that the air is indeed the child of the quarters, never weeps for his sons. 'I know the wind to be the child of the quarters, may I never weep for my sons.'

3. 'I turn to the imperishable chest with such and such and such.' 'I turn to the Prâna (life) with such and such and such.' 'I turn to Bhûk with such and such and such.' 'I turn to BhuvaK with such and such and such.' 'I turn to SvaK with such and such and such.'

4. 'When I said, I turn to Prâna, then Prâna means all whatever exists here—to that I turn.'

5. 'When I said, I turn to Bhûk, what I said is, I turn to the earth, the sky, and heaven.'

---

1 The object of this section, the Kosavignâna, is to show how the promise made in III, 13, 6, 'that a strong son should be born in a man's family,' is to be fulfilled.

2 These names are explained by the commentator as follows: Because people offer libations (guhvati), turning to the east, therefore it is called Guhû. Because evil doers suffer (sahante) in the town of Yama, which is in the south, therefore it is called Sahamânâ. The western quarter is called Râgû, either because it is sacred to king Varuwa (râgan), or on account of the red colour (râga) of the twilight. The north is called Subhûtâ, because wealthy beings (bhûtimat), like Kuvera &c., reside there.

3 Here the names of the sons are to be pronounced.
6. ‘When I said, I turn to Bhuval, what I said is, I turn to Agni (fire), Vâyu (air), Âditya (sun).’

7. ‘When I said, I turn to Svakâ, what I said is, I turn to the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, and Sâma-veda. That is what I said, yea, that is what I said.’

Sixteenth Khanda 1.

1. Man is sacrifice. His (first) twenty-four years are the morning-libation. The Gâyatris have twenty-four syllables, the morning-libation is offered with Gâyatri hymns. The Vasus are connected with that part of the sacrifice. The Prânas (the five senses) are the Vasus, for they make all this to abide (vásayanti).

2. If anything ails him in that (early) age, let him say: ‘Ye Prânas, ye Vasus, extend this my morning-libation unto the midday-libation, that I, the sacrificer, may not perish in the midst of the Prânas or Vasus.’ Thus he recovers from his illness, and becomes whole.

3. The next forty-four years are the midday-libation. The Trishûbhas has forty-four syllables, the midday-libation is offered with Trishûbha hymns. The Rudras are connected with that part of it. The Prânas are the Rudras, for they make all this to cry (rodayanti).

4. If anything ails him in that (second) age, let him say: ‘Ye Prânas, ye Rudras, extend this my midday-libation unto the third libation, that I, the sacrificer, may not perish in the midst of the Prânas or Rudras.’ Thus he recovers from his illness, and becomes whole.

5. The next forty-eight years are the third

1 The object of this Khanda is to show how to obtain long life, as promised before.
libation. The Gagati has forty-eight syllables, the third libation is offered with Gagati hymns. The Ādityas are connected with that part of it. The Prânas are the Ādityas, for they take up all this (adadate).

6. If anything ails him in that (third) age, let him say: 'Ye Prânas, ye Ādityas, extend this my third libation unto the full age, that I, the sacrificer, may not perish in the midst of the Prânas or Ādityas.' Thus he recovers from his illness, and becomes whole.

7. Mahidâsa Aitareya (the son of Itarâ), who knew this, said (addressing a disease): 'Why dost thou afflict me, as I shall not die by it?' He lived a hundred and sixteen years (i.e. 24 + 44 + 48). He, too, who knows this lives on to a hundred and sixteen years.

Seventeenth Khanda

1. When a man (who is the sacrificer) hungers, thrusts, and abstains from pleasures, that is the Dikshâ (initiatory rite).

2. When a man eats, drinks, and enjoys pleasures, he does it with the Upasadas (the sacrificial days on which the sacrificer is allowed to partake of food).

3. When a man laughs, eats, and delights himself, he does it with the Stuta-sastras (hymns sung and recited at the sacrifices).

4. Penance, liberality, righteousness, kindness, truthfulness, these form his Dakshinâs (gifts bestowed on priests, &c.)

5. Therefore when they say, 'There will be a

1 Here we have a representation of the sacrifice as performed without any ceremonial, and as it is often represented when performed in thought only by a man living in the forest.
birth,' and 'there has been a birth' (words used at the Soma-sacrifice, and really meaning, 'He will pour out the Soma-juice,' and 'he has poured out the Soma-juice'), that is his new birth. His death is the Avabhrīṭha ceremony (when the sacrificial vessels are carried away to be cleansed).

6. Ghora Āṅgirasa, after having communicated this (view of the sacrifice) to Krishṇa, the son of Devāki\(^1\)—and he never thirsted again (after other knowledge)—said: 'Let a man, when his end ap-

\(^1\) The curious coincidence between Krishṇa Devakīputra, here mentioned as a pupil of Ghora Āṅgirasa, and the famous Krishṇa, the son of Devāki, was first pointed out by Colebrooke, Miscell. Essays, II. 177. Whether it is more than a coincidence, is difficult to say. Certainly we can build no other conclusions on it than those indicated by Colebrooke, that new fables may have been constructed elevating this personage to the rank of a god. We know absolutely nothing of the old Krishṇa Devakīputra except his having been a pupil of Ghora Āṅgirasa, nor does there seem to have been any attempt made by later Brahmans to connect their divine Krishṇa, the son of Vasudeva, with the Krishṇa Devakīputra of our Upanishad. This is all the more remarkable because the author of the Sāndīlya-sūtras, for instance, who is very anxious to find a śrauta authority for the worship of Krishṇa Vāsudeva as the supreme deity, had to be satisfied with quoting such modern compilations as the Nārāyanopanishad, Atharvasiras, VI, 9, brahmanyо devakīputro brahmanyо madhusūdanaḥ (see Sāndīlya-sūtras, ed. Ballantyne, p. 36, translated by Cowell, p. 51), without venturing to refer to the Krishṇa Devakīputra of the Khāndogya-panishad. The occurrence of such names as Krishṇa, Vāsudeva, Madhusūdana stamps Upanishads, like the Ātmabodha-panishad, as modern (Colebrooke, Essays, I, 101), and the same remark applies, as Weber has shown, to the Gopālatāpani-panishad (Bibliotheca Indica, No. 183), where we actually find such names as Srikrishṇa Govinda, Gopīganavallabha, Devakyāṃ gātāḥ (p. 38), &c. Professor Weber has treated these questions very fully, but it is not quite clear to me whether he wishes to go beyond Colebrooke and to admit more than a similarity of name between the pupil of Ghora Āṅgirasa and the friend of the Gopīs.
proaches, take refuge with this Triad: "Thou art the imperishable," "Thou art the unchangeable," "Thou art the edge of Prāna." On this subject there are two Rik verses (Rig-veda VIII, 6, 30):

7. 'Then they see (within themselves) the ever-present light of the old seed (of the world, the Sat), the highest, which is lighted in the brilliant (Brahman).’ Rig-veda I, 50, 10:

'Perceiving above the darkness (of ignorance) the higher light (in the sun), as the higher light within the heart, the bright source (of light and life) among the gods, we have reached the highest light, yea, the highest light.'

EIGHTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Let a man meditate on mind as Brahman (n.), this is said with reference to the body. Let a man meditate on the ether as Brahman (n.), this is said with reference to the Devas. Thus both the meditation which has reference to the body, and the meditation which has reference to the Devas, has been taught.

2. That Brahman (mind) has four feet (quarters).

---

1 Let him recite these three verses.

2 Both these verses had to be translated here according to their scholastic interpretation, but they had originally a totally different meaning. Even the text was altered, divâ being changed to divi, svaḥ to sve. The first is taken from a hymn addressed to Indra, who after conquering the dark clouds brings back the light of the sun. When he does that, then the people see again, as the poet says, the daily light of the old seed (from which the sun rises) which is lighted in heaven. The other verse belongs to a hymn addressed to the sun. Its simple meaning is: 'Seeing above the darkness (of the night) the rising light, the Sun, bright among the bright, we came towards the highest light.'

3 This is a further elucidation of Kh. Up. III, 14, 2.
Speech is one foot, breath is one foot, the eye is one foot, the ear is one foot—so much with reference to the body. Then with reference to the gods, Agni (fire) is one foot, Vāyu (air) is one foot, Āditya (sun) is one foot, the quarters are one foot. Thus both the worship which has reference to the body, and the worship which has reference to the Devas, has been taught.

3. Speech is indeed the fourth foot of Brahman. That foot shines with Agni (fire) as its light, and warms. He who knows this, shines and warms through his celebrity, fame, and glory of countenance.

4. Breath is indeed the fourth foot of Brahman. That foot shines with Vāyu (air) as its light, and warms. He who knows this, shines and warms through his celebrity, fame, and glory of countenance.

5. The eye is indeed the fourth foot of Brahman. That foot shines with Āditya (sun) as its light, and warms. He who knows this, shines and warms through his celebrity, fame, and glory of countenance.

6. The ear is indeed the fourth foot of Brahman. That foot shines with the quarters as its light, and warms. He who knows this, shines and warms through his celebrity, fame, and glory of countenance.

NINETEENTH KHANDA.

1. Āditya (the sun) is Brahman, this is the doctrine, and this is the fuller account of it:—

In the beginning this was non-existent. It be-

---

1 Āditya, or the sun, had before been represented as one of the four feet of Brahman. He is now represented as Brahman, or as to be meditated on as such.

2 Not yet existing, not yet developed in form and name, and therefore as if not existing.
came existent, it grew. It turned into an egg. The egg lay for the time of a year. The egg broke open. The two halves were one of silver, the other of gold.

2. The silver one became this earth, the golden one the sky, the thick membrane (of the white) the mountains, the thin membrane (of the yoke) the mist with the clouds, the small veins the rivers, the fluid the sea.

3. And what was born from it that was Āditya, the sun. When he was born shouts of hurrah arose, and all beings arose, and all things which they desired. Therefore whenever the sun rises and sets, shouts of hurrah arise, and all beings arise, and all things which they desire.

4. If any one knowing this meditates on the sun as Brahman, pleasant shouts will approach him and will continue, yea, they will continue.

FOURTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANDE.

1. There lived once upon a time Gânasruti Paurââyana (the great-grandson of Gânasruta), who was a pious giver, bestowing much wealth upon the

---

1 Ānda instead of anda is explained as a Vedic irregularity. A similar cosmogony is given in Manu's Law Book, I, 12 seq. See Kellgren, Mythus de ovo mundano, Helsingfors, 1849.

2 Vâyu (air) and Prâna (breath) had before been represented as feet of Brahman, as the second pair. Now they are represented as Brahman, and as to be meditated on as such. This is the teaching of Raikva. The language of this chapter is very obscure, and I am not satisfied with the translation.
people, and always keeping open house. He built places of refuge everywhere, wishing that people should everywhere eat of his food.

2. Once in the night some Hamsas (flamingoes) flew over his house, and one flamingo said to another: ‘Hey, Bhalláksha, Bhalláksha (short-sighted friend). The light (glory) of Gânasruti Pauráyana has spread like the sky. Do not go near, that it may not burn thee.’

3. The other answered him: ‘How can you speak of him, being what he is (a rāganya, noble), as if he were like Raikva with the car?’

4. The first replied: ‘How is it with this Raikva with the car of whom thou speakest?’

The other answered: ‘As (in a game of dice) all the lower casts belong to him who has conquered with the Kríta cast, so whatever good deeds other people perform, belong to that Raikva. He who knows what he knows, he is thus spoken of by me.’

5. Gânasruti Pauráyana overheard this conversation, and as soon as he had risen in the morning, he said to his door-keeper (kshatrī): ‘Friend, dost thou speak of (me, as if I were) Raikva with the car?’

He replied: ‘How is it with this Raikva with the car?’

6. The king said: ‘As (in a game of dice), all the lower casts belong to him who has conquered with the Kríta cast, so whatever good deeds other people perform, belong to that Raikva. He who knows what he knows, he is thus spoken of by me.’

---

1 Sayugvan is explained as possessed of a car with yoked horses or oxen. Could it have meant originally, ‘yoke-fellow, equal,’ as in Rig-veda X, 130, 4? Anquetil renders it by ‘semper cum se ipso camelum solutum habens.’

2 Instead of adhareyâh, we must read adhare ‘yâh.
7. The door-keeper went to look for Raikva, but returned saying, 'I found him not.' Then the king said: 'Alas! where a Brâhmana should be searched for (in the solitude of the forest), there go for him.'

8. The door-keeper came to a man who was lying beneath a car and scratching his sores. He addressed him, and said: 'Sir, are you Raikva with the car?' He answered: 'Here I am.' Then the door-keeper returned, and said: 'I have found him.'

SECOND KHANDA.

1. Then Gânasruti Pauitrâyana took six hundred cows, a necklace, and a carriage with mules, went to Raikva and said:

2. 'Raikva, here are six hundred cows, a necklace, and a carriage with mules; teach me the deity which you worship.'

3. The other replied: 'Fie, necklace and carriage be thine, O Südra, together with the cows.' Then Gânasruti Pauitrâyana took again a thousand cows, a necklace, a carriage with mules, and his own daughter, and went to him.

4. He said to him: 'Raikva, there are a thousand cows, a necklace, a carriage with mules, this wife, and this village in which thou dwellest. Sir, teach me!'

5. He, opening her mouth, said: 'You have

1 It is curious that in a hymn of the Atharva-veda (V, 22, 5, 8) takman, apparently a disease of the skin, is relegated to the Mahâvrîshas, where Raikva dwelt. Roth, Zur Literatur des Veda, p. 36.
2 To find out her age. The commentator translates, 'Raikva, knowing her mouth to be the door of knowledge, i.e. knowing that for her he might impart his knowledge to Gânasruti, and that brought these (cows and other presents), O Sûdra, but only by that mouth did you make me speak.

These are the Raikva-parâna villages in the country of the Mahâvrishas (mahâpunyas) where Raikva dwelt under him ¹. And he said to him:

Third Khanda.

1. 'Air (vâyu) is indeed the end of all ². For when fire goes out, it goes into air. When the sun goes down, it goes into air. When the moon goes down, it goes into air.

2. 'When water dries up, it goes into air. Air indeed consumes them all. So much with reference to the Devas.

3. 'Now with reference to the body. Breath (prâna) is indeed the end of all. When a man sleeps, speech goes into breath, so do sight, hearing, and mind. Breath indeed consumes them all.

4. 'These are the two ends, air among the Devas, breath among the senses (prânâh).'

5. Once while Saunaka Kâpeya and Abhipratârin Kâkshaseni were being waited on at their meal, a religious student begged of them. They gave him nothing.

6. He said: 'One god—who is he?—swallowed the four great ones ³, he, the guardian of the world.

Garasruti by bringing such rich gifts had become a proper receiver of knowledge, consented to do what he had before refused.'

¹ The commentator supplies adât, the king gave the villages to him.

² Samvarga, absorption, whence samvargavidyâ, not samsarga. It is explained by samvargana, samgrahana, and samgrasana, in the text itself by adana, eating.

³ This must refer to Vâyu and Prâna swallowing the four, as explained in IV, 3, 2, and IV, 3, 3. The commentator explains
O Kâpeya, mortals see him not, O Abhipratârîna, though he dwells in many places. He to whom this food belongs, to him it has not been given 1.'

7. Saunaka Kâpeya, pondering on that speech, went to the student and said: 'He is the self of the Devas, the creator of all beings, with golden tusks, the eater, not without intelligence. His greatness is said to be great indeed, because, without being eaten, he eats even what is not food 2. Thus do we, O Brahmaârîna, meditate on that Being.' Then he said: 'Give him food.'

8. They gave him food. Now these five (the eater Vâyu (air), and his food, Agni (fire), Âditya (sun), Kândramas (moon), Ap (water)) and the other five (the eater Prâna (breath), and his food, speech, sight, hearing, mind) make ten, and that is the Krîta (the highest 3) cast (representing the ten, the eaters and the food). Therefore in all quarters those ten are food (and) Krîta (the highest cast). These are again the Vîrag 4 (of ten syllables)

---

1 The food which you have refused to me, you have really refused to Brahman.
2 Saunaka wishes the student to understand that though 'mortals see him not,' he sees and knows him, viz. the god who, as Vâyu, swallows all the gods, but produces them again, and who, as prâna, swallows during sleep all senses, but produces them again at the time of waking.
3 The words are obscure, and the commentator does not throw much light on them. He explains, however, the four casts of the dice, the Krîta=4, the Tretâ=3, the Dvâpara=2, the Kali=1, making together 10, the Krîta cast absorbing the other casts, and thus counting ten.
4 Vîrag, name of a metre of ten syllables, and also a name of food. One expects, 'which is the food and eats the food.'
which eats the food. Through this all this becomes seen. He who knows this sees all this and becomes an eater of food, yea, he becomes an eater of food.

Fourth Khanda

1. Satyakāma, the son of Gabālā, addressed his mother and said: ‘I wish to become a Brahmārīn (religious student), mother. Of what family am I?’

2. She said to him: ‘I do not know, my child, of what family thou art. In my youth when I had to move about much as a servant (waiting on the guests in my father’s house), I conceived thee. I do not know of what family thou art. I am Gabālā by name, thou art Satyakāma (Philalethes). Say that thou art Satyakāma Gābāla.’

3. He going to Gautama Hāridrumata said to him, ‘I wish to become a Brahmārīn with you, Sir. May I come to you, Sir?’

4. He said to him: ‘Of what family are you, my friend?’ He replied: ‘I do not know, Sir, of what family I am. I asked my mother, and she answered: “In my youth when I had to move about much as a servant, I conceived thee. I do not know of what family thou art. I am Gabālā by name, thou art Satyakāma,” I am therefore Satyakāma Gābāla, Sir.’

5. He said to him: ‘No one but a true Brāhmaṇa would thus speak out. Go and fetch fuel, friend, I shall initiate you. You have not swerved from the truth.’

Having initiated him, he chose four hundred lean and weak cows, and said: ‘Tend these, friend.’

---

1 This carries on the explanation of the four feet of Brahman, as first mentioned in III, 18, 1. Each foot or quarter of Brahman is represented as fourfold, and the knowledge of these sixteen parts is called the Shodramakālavidya.
He drove them out and said to himself, 'I shall not return unless I bring back a thousand.' He dwelt a number of years (in the forest), and when the cows had become a thousand,

Fifth Khanda.

1. The bull of the herd (meant for Vāyu) said to him: 'Satyakāma!' He replied: 'Sir!' The bull said: 'We have become a thousand, lead us to the house of the teacher;

2. 'And I will declare to you one foot of Brahman.'
   'Declare it, Sir,' he replied.
   He said to him: 'The eastern region is one quarter, the western region is one quarter, the southern region is one quarter, the northern region is one quarter. This is a foot of Brahman, consisting of the four quarters, and called Prakāsavat (endowed with splendour).

3. 'He who knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Prakāsavat, becomes endowed with splendour in this world. He conquers the resplendent worlds, whoever knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of the four quarters, by the name of Prakāsavat.

Sixth Khanda.

1. 'Agni will declare to you another foot of Brahman.'

   (After these words of the bull), Satyakāma, on the morrow, drove the cows (towards the house of the teacher). And when they came towards the evening, he lighted a fire, penned the cows, laid wood on the fire, and sat down behind the fire, looking to the east.
2. Then Agni (the fire) said to him: 'Satyakâma!' He replied: 'Sir.'

3. Agni said: 'Friend, I will declare unto you one foot of Brahman.'

   'Declare it, Sir,' he replied.

   He said to him: 'The earth is one quarter, the sky is one quarter, the heaven is one quarter, the ocean is one quarter. This is a foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, and called Anantavat (endless).

4. 'He who knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Anantavat, becomes endless in this world. He conquers the endless worlds, whoever knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Anantavat.

SEVENTH KHANDA.

1. 'A Hamsa (flamingo, meant for the sun) will declare to you another foot of Brahman.'

   (After these words of Agni), Satyakâma, on the morrow, drove the cows onward. And when they came towards the evening, he lighted a fire, penned the cows, laid wood on the fire, and sat down behind the fire, looking toward the east.

2. Then a Hamsa flew near and said to him: 'Satyakâma.' He replied: 'Sir.'

3. The Hamsa said: 'Friend, I will declare unto you one foot of Brahman.'

   'Declare it, Sir,' he replied.

   He said to him: 'Fire is one quarter, the sun is one quarter, the moon is one quarter, lightning is one quarter. This is a foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, and called Gyoishmat (full of light).
4. 'He who knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Gyotishmat, becomes full of light in this world. He conquers the worlds which are full of light, whoever knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Gyotishmat.

EIGHTH KHANDA.

1. 'A diver-bird (Madgu, meant for Prāna) will declare to you another foot of Brahman.'

(After these words of the Hamsa), Satyakāma, on the morrow, drove the cows onward. And when they came towards the evening, he lighted a fire, penned the cows, laid wood on the fire, and sat down behind the fire, looking toward the east.

2. Then a diver flew near and said to him: 'Satyakāma.' He replied: 'Sir.'

3. The diver said: 'Friend, I will declare unto you one foot of Brahman.'

'Declare it, Sir,' he replied.

He said to him: 'Breath is one quarter, the eye is one quarter, the ear is one quarter, the mind is one quarter. This is a foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, and called Âyatanavat (having a home).

'He who knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Âyatanavat, becomes possessed of a home in this world. He conquers the worlds which offer a home, whoever knows this and meditates on the foot of Brahman, consisting of four quarters, by the name of Âyatanavat.'
NINTH KHANDA.

1. Thus he reached the house of his teacher. The teacher said to him: 'Satyakâma.' He replied: 'Sir.'

2. The teacher said: 'Friend, you shine like one who knows Brahman. Who then has taught you?' He replied: 'Not men. But you only, Sir, I wish, should teach me;'

3. 'For I have heard from men like you, Sir, that only knowledge which is learnt from a teacher (Âkârya), leads to real good.' Then he taught him the same knowledge. Nothing was left out, yea, nothing was left out.

TENTH KHANDA 3.

1. Upakosala Kâmâlâyana dwelt as a Brahma-kârin (religious student) in the house of Satyakâma Gâbâla. He tended his fires for twelve years. But the teacher, though he allowed other pupils (after they had learnt the sacred books) to depart to their own homes, did not allow Upakosala to depart.

2. Then his wife said to him: 'This student, who is quite exhausted (with austerities), has carefully tended your fires. Let not the fires themselves blame you, but teach him.' The teacher, however, went away on a journey without having taught him.

3. The student from sorrow was not able to eat.

---

1 It would have been a great offence if Satyakâma had accepted instruction from any man, except his recognised teacher.
2 The text should be, bhagavâms tv eva me kâme brûyât (me kâme=mamekkhâyâm).
3 The Upakosala-vidyâ teaches first Brahman as the cause, and then in its various forms, and is therefore called âtmavidyâ and agnividyâ.
Then the wife of the teacher said to him: 'Student, eat! Why do you not eat?' He said: 'There are many desires in this man here, which lose themselves in different directions. I am full of sorrows, and shall take no food.'

4. Thereupon the fires said among themselves: 'This student, who is quite exhausted, has carefully tended us. Well, let us teach him.' They said to him:

5. 'Breath is Brahman, Ka (pleasure) is Brahman, Kha (ether) is Brahman.'

He said: 'I understand that breath is Brahman, but I do not understand Ka or Kha. '

They said: 'What is Ka is Kha, what is Kha is Ka.' They therefore taught him Brahman as breath, and as the ether (in the heart).

Eleventh Khanda.

1. After that the Gârhapatyâ fire taught him: 'Earth, fire, food, and the sun (these are my forms, or

---

1 I do not understand, he means, how Ka, which means pleasure, and is non-eternal, and how Kha, which means ether, and is not intelligent, can be Brahman.

2 The commentator explains as follows:—Ka is pleasure, and Kha is ether, but these two words are to determine each other mutually, and thus to form one idea. Ka therefore does not mean ordinary pleasures, but pleasures such as belong to Kha, the ether. And Kha does not signify the ordinary outward ether, but the ether in the heart, which alone is capable of pleasure. What is meant by Ka and Kha is therefore the sentient ether in the heart, and that is Brahman, while Prâna, breath, is Brahman, in so far as it is united with the ether in the heart.

3 And as its ether, i.e. as the ether in the heart, the Brahman, with which prâna is connected. Comm.

4 The household altar. forms of Brahman). The person that is seen in the sun, I am he, I am he indeed.

2. ‘He who knowing this meditates on him, destroys sin, obtains the world (of Agni Gârhapatyà), reaches his full age, and lives long; his descendants do not perish. We guard him in this world and in the other, whosoever knowing this meditates on him.’

Twelfth Khanda.

1. Then the Anvâhârya fire taught him: ‘Water, the quarters, the stars, the moon (these are my forms). The person that is seen in the moon, I am he, I am he indeed.

2. ‘He who knowing this meditates on him, destroys sin, obtains the world (of Agni Anvâhârya), reaches his full age, and lives long; his descendants do not perish. We guard him in this world and in the other, whosoever knowing this meditates on him.’

Thirteenth Khanda.

1. Then the Âhavaniya fire taught him: ‘Breath, ether, heaven, and lightning (these are my forms). The person that is seen in the lightning, I am he, I am he indeed.

1 Fanciful similarities and relations between the fires of the three altars and their various forms and manifestations are pointed out by the commentator. Thus earth and food are represented as warmed and boiled by the fire. The sun is said to give warmth and light like the fire of the altar. The chief point, however, is that in all of them Brahman is manifested.

2 The altar on the right. Anvâhârya is a sacrificial oblation, chiefly one intended for the manes.

3 The Âhavaniya altar is the altar on the eastern side of the sacrificial ground.
2. ‘He who knowing this meditates on him, destroys sin, obtains the world (of Agni Âhavaniya), reaches his full age, and lives long; his descendants do not perish. We guard him in this world and in the other, whosoever knowing this meditates on him.’

FOURTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Then they all said: ‘Upakosala, this is our knowledge, our friend, and the knowledge of the Self, but the teacher will tell you the way (to another life).’

2. In time his teacher came back, and said to him: ‘Upakosala.’ He answered: ‘Sir.’ The teacher said: ‘Friend, your face shines like that of one who knows Brahman. Who has taught you?’

‘Who should teach me, Sir?’ he said. He denies, as it were. And he said (pointing) to the fires: ‘Are these fires other than fires?’

The teacher said: ‘What, my friend, have these fires told you?’

3. He answered: ‘This’ (repeating some of what they had told him).

The teacher said: ‘My friend, they have taught you about the worlds, but I shall tell you this; and as water does not cling to a lotus leaf, so no evil deed clings to one who knows it.’ He said: ‘Sir, tell it me.’

FIFTEENTH KHANDA.

1. He said: ‘The person that is seen in the eye, that is the Self. This is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman. Even though they drop melted

---

1 This is also the teaching of Pragâpati in VIII, 7, 4.
butter or water on him, it runs away on both sides.

2. 'They call him Samyadvâma, for all blessings (vâma) go towards him (samyanti). All blessings go towards him who knows this.

3. 'He is also Vâmanî, for he leads (nayati) all blessings (vâma). He leads all blessings who knows this.

4. 'He is also Bhâmanî, for he shines (bhâti) in all worlds. He who knows this, shines in all worlds.

5. 'Now (if one who knows this, dies), whether people perform obsequies for him or no, he goes to light (arkâs)², from light to day, from day to the light half of the moon, from the light half of the moon to the six months during which the sun goes to the north, from the months to the year, from the year to the sun, from the sun to the moon, from the moon to the lightning. There is a person not human,

6. 'He leads them to Brahman. This is the path of the Devas, the path that leads to Brahman. Those who proceed on that path, do not return to the life of man, yea, they do not return.'

Sixteenth Khanda.³

1. Verily, he who purifies (Vâyu) is the sacrifice, for he (the air) moving along, purifies everything.

---

¹ It does so in the eye, and likewise with the person in the eye, who is not affected by anything. Cf. Kâ. Up. IV, 14, 3.
³ If any mistakes happen during the performance of a sacrifice, as described before, they are remedied by certain interjectional
Because moving along he purifies everything, therefore he is the sacrifice. Of that sacrifice there are two ways, by mind and by speech.

2. The Brahman priest performs one of them in his mind, the Hotri, Adhvaryu, and Udgātrī priests perform the other by words. When the Brahman priest, after the Prātaranuvāka ceremony has begun, but before the recitation of the Paridhāniyā hymn, has (to break his silence and) to speak,

3. He performs perfectly the one way only (that by words), but the other is injured. As a man walking on one foot, or a carriage going on one wheel, is injured, his sacrifice is injured, and with the injured sacrifice the sacrificer is injured; yes, having sacrificed, he becomes worse.

4. But when after the Prātaranuvāka ceremony has begun, and before the recitation of the Paridhāniyā hymn, the Brahman priest has not (to break his silence and) to speak, they perform both ways perfectly, and neither of them is injured.

5. As a man walking on two legs and a carriage going on two wheels gets on, so his sacrifice gets on, and with the successful sacrifice the sacrificer gets on; yes, having sacrificed, he becomes better.

syllables (vyāhrū), the nature of which is next described. All this is supposed to take place in the forest.

1 While the other priests perform the sacrifice, the Brahman priest has to remain silent, following the whole sacrifice in his mind, and watching that no mistake be committed. If a mistake is committed, he has to correct it, and for that purpose certain corrective penances (prāyaskiṭṭa) are enjoined. The performance of the Brahman priest resembles the meditations of the sages in the forest, and therefore this chapter is here inserted.
SEVENTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Pragâpati brooded over the worlds, and from them thus brooded on he squeezed out the essences, Agni (fire) from the earth, Vâyu (air) from the sky, Âditya (the sun) from heaven.

2. He brooded over these three deities, and from them thus brooded on he squeezed out the essences, the Rik verses from Agni, the Yagus verses from Vâyu, the Sàman verses from Âditya.

3. He brooded over the threefold knowledge (the three Vedas), and from it thus brooded on he squeezed out the essences, the sacred interjection Bhûs from the Rik verses, the sacred interjection Bhuvas from the Yagus verses, the sacred inter- jection Svar from the Sàman verses.

4. If the sacrifice is injured from the Rig-veda side, let him offer a libation in the Gârhapatya fire, saying, Bhûh, Sváha! Thus does he bind together and heal, by means of the essence and the power of the Rik verses themselves, whatever break the Rik sacrifice may have suffered.

5. If the sacrifice is injured from the Yaçur-veda side, let him offer a libation in the Dakshina fire, saying, Bhuvaḥ, Sváha! Thus does he bind together and heal, by means of the essence and the power of the Yagus verses themselves, whatever break the Yagus sacrifice may have suffered.

6. If the sacrifice is injured by the Sâma-veda side, let him offer a libation in the Âhavaniya fire, saying, Svah, Sváhâ! Thus does he bind together and heal, by means of the essence and the power of the Sàman verses themselves, whatever break the Sàman sacrifice may have suffered.
7. As one binds (softens) gold by means of lavana¹ (borax), and silver by means of gold, and tin by means of silver, and lead by means of tin, and iron (loha) by means of lead, and wood by means of iron, or also by means of leather,

8. Thus does one bind together and heal any break in the sacrifice by means of (the Vyāhṛtīs or sacrificial interjections which are) the essence and strength of the three worlds, of the deities, and of the threefold knowledge. That sacrifice is healed² in which there is a Brahman priest who knows this.

9. That sacrifice is inclined towards the north (in the right way) in which there is a Brahman priest who knows this. And with regard to such a Brahman priest there is the following Gāthā³: 'Wherever it falls back, thither the man⁴ goes,'—viz. the Brahman only, as one of the Rītvig priests. 'He saves the Kurus as a mare' (viz. a Brahman priest who

¹ Lavana, a kind of salt, explained by kshāra and taṅka or taṅkana. It is evidently borax, which is still imported from the East Indies under the name of tincal, and used as a flux in chemical processes.

² Bhesagakṛita, explained by bhashagena 'iva krītah sanskrītah, and also by ṭikitsakena surīkṣhitena 'esha yagño bhavati,' which looks as if the commentator had taken it as a genitive of bhesagakṛt.

³ This Gāthā (or, according to Saṅkara, Anugāthā) is probably a Gāyatrī, though Ānandagiri says that it is not in the Gāyatrī or any other definite metre. It may have been originally 'yato yata āvartate, tattad gakkhātī mānavah, kurūn arvābhīrakṣati.' This might be taken from an old epic ballad, 'Wherever the army fell back, thither the man went; the mare (mares being preferred to stallions in war) saves the Kurus.' That verse was applied to the Brahman priest succouring the sacrifice, whenever it seemed to waver, and protecting the Kurus, i.e. the performers of the sacrifice.

⁴ Mānava, explained from mauna, or manana, but possibly originally, a descendant of Manu.
knows this, saves the sacrifice, the sacrificer, and all the other priests). Therefore let a man make him who knows this his Brahman priest, not one who does not know it, who does not know it.

FIFTH PRAPÂTHAKA 1.

First KhandA.

1. He who knows the oldest and the best becomes himself the oldest and the best. Breath indeed is the oldest and the best.

2. He who knows the richest, becomes himself the richest. Speech indeed is the richest.

3. He who knows the firm rest, becomes himself firm in this world and in the next. The eye indeed is the firm rest.

4. He who knows success, his wishes succeed, both his divine and human wishes. The ear indeed is success.

5. He who knows the home, becomes a home of his people. The mind indeed is the home.

6. The five senses quarrelled together 2, who was the best, saying, I am better, I am better.

1 The chief object is to show the different ways on which people proceed after death. One of these ways, the Devapatha that leads to Brahman and from which there is no return, has been described, IV, 15. The other ways for those who on earth know the conditioned Brahman only, have to be discussed now.

2 The same fable, the prânasamyâda or prânavidyâ, is told in the Brihadâranyaka VI, 1, 1-14, the Aitareya Âr. II, 4, the Kaush. Up. III, 3, and the Prasna Up. II, 3. The last is the simplest version of all, but it does not follow therefore that it is the oldest. It would be difficult to find two fables apparently more alike, yet in reality differing from each other more characteristically than this fable and the fable told to the plebeians by Menenius Agrippa.
7. They went to their father Prapâpati and said: 'Sir, who is the best of us?' He replied: 'He by whose departure the body seems worse than worst, he is the best of you.'

8. The tongue (speech) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came round and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like mute people, not speaking, but breathing with the breath, seeing with the eye, hearing with the ear, thinking with the mind. Thus we lived.' Then speech went back.

9. The eye (sight) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came round and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like blind people, not seeing, but breathing with the breath, speaking with the tongue, hearing with the ear, thinking with the mind. Thus we lived.' Then the eye went back.

10. The ear (hearing) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came round and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like deaf people, not hearing, but breathing with the breath, speaking with the tongue, thinking with the mind. Thus we lived.' Then the ear went back.

11. The mind departed, and having been absent for a year, it came round and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like children whose mind is not yet formed, but breathing with the breath, speaking with the tongue, seeing with the eye, hearing with the ear. Thus we lived.' Then the mind went back.

12. The breath, when on the point of departing, tore up the other senses, as a horse, going to start, might tear up the pegs to which he is tethered. They came to him and said: 'Sir, be thou (our lord); thou art the best among us. Do not depart from us!'

13. Then the tongue said to him: 'If I am the richest, thou art the richest.' The eye said to him: 'If I am the firm rest, thou art the firm rest.'

14. The ear said to him: 'If I am success, thou art success.' The mind said to him: 'If I am the home, thou art the home.'

15. And people do not call them, the tongues, the eyes, the ears, the minds, but the breaths (prāna, the senses). For breath are all these.

SECOND KHĀNDA.

1. Breath said: 'What shall be my food?' They answered: 'Whatever there is, even unto dogs and birds.' Therefore this is food for Ana (the breather). His name is clearly Ana. To him who knows this there is nothing that is not (proper) food.

2. He said: 'What shall be my dress?' They answered: 'Water.' Therefore wise people, when they are going to eat food, surround their food before and after with water. He (prāna) thus gains a dress, and is no longer naked.

1 Padvīsa, fetter, päḍn, pedica, a word now well known, but which Burnouf (Commentaire sur le Yaçna, Notes, CLXXIV) tried in vain to decipher.

2 Burnouf rightly preferred pratishṭāsi to pratishṭho 'si, though the commentary on the corresponding passage of the Brihadāranyaka seems to favour tatpratishṭho 'si.

3 Ana, breather, more general than pra-ana = prāna, forth-breather, and the other more specified names of breath.

4 They rinse the mouth before and after every meal.

5 We expect, 'He who knows this,' instead of prāna, but as
3. Satyakāma Gābāla, after he had communicated this to Gosruti Vaiyāghrapadya, said to him: 'If you were to tell this to a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring from it.'

4. If a man wishes to reach greatness, let him perform the Dikṣā (preparatory rite) on the day of the new moon, and then, on the night of the full moon, let him stir a mash of all kinds of herbs with curds and honey, and let him pour ghee on the fire (āvasathyā laukika), saying, 'Svāhā to the oldest and the best.' After that let him throw all that remains (of the ghee) into the mash.

5. In the same manner let him pour ghee on the fire, saying, 'Svāhā to the richest.' After that let him throw all that remains together into the mash.

In the same manner let him pour ghee on the fire, saying, 'Svāhā to the firm rest.' After that let him throw all that remains together into the mash.

In the same manner let him pour ghee on the fire, saying, 'Svāhā to success.' After that let him throw all that remains together into the mash.

6. Then going forward and placing the mash prāna may apply to every individual prāna, the usual finishing sentence was possibly dropped on purpose.

1 The oblation here described is called mantha, a mortar, or what is pounded in a mortar, i.e. barley stirred in some kind of gravy. See Gaim. N. M. V. p. 406.

2 Not the real dikṣā, which is a preparatory rite for great sacrifices, but penance, truthfulness, abstinence, which take the place of dikṣā with those who live in the forest and devote themselves to upāsana, meditative worship.

3 What is here called sampātam avanayati is the same as samṣravam avanayati in the Brīh. Ār. VI, 3, 2. The commentator says: Sruvāvalepanam āgyam mantham samṣrāvayati.
in his hands, he recites: 'Thou (Prāna) art Ama by name, for all this together exists in thee. He is the oldest and best, the king, the sovereign. May he make me the oldest, the best, the king, the sovereign. May I be all this.'

7. Then he eats with the following Rik verse at every foot: 'We choose that food'—here he swallows—'Of the divine Savitri (prāna)—here he swallows—'The best and all-supporting food'—here he swallows—'We meditate on the speed of Bhaga (Savitri, prāna)—here he drinks all.

8. Having cleansed the vessel, whether it be a kamsa or a kamasa, he sits down behind the fire on a skin or on the bare ground, without speaking or making any other effort. If in his dream he sees a woman, let him know this to be a sign that his sacrifice has succeeded.

9. On this there is a Sloka: 'If during sacrifices which are to fulfil certain wishes he sees in his dreams a woman, let him know success from this vision in a dream, yea, from this vision in a dream.'

Third Khanda 2.

1. Svetaketu Āruneya went to an assembly 3 of the Pañkālas. Pravāhana Gaivali 4 said to him: 'Boy, has your father instructed you?' 'Yes, Sir,' he replied.

2. 'Do you know to what place men go from here?' 'No, Sir,' he replied.

---

1 Cf. Brīh. Âr. I, 1, 3, 22.
2 This story is more fully told in the Brīhadāranyaka VI, 2, Satapatha-brāhmana XIV, 8, 16.
3 Samiti, or parishad, as in the Brīh. Âr.
4 He is the same Kshatriya sage who appeared in I, 8, 1, silencing the Brāhmans.
'Do you know how they return again?' 'No, Sir,' he replied.

'Do you know where the path of Devas and the path of the fathers diverge?' 'No, Sir,' he replied.

3. 'Do you know why that world \(^1\) never becomes full?' 'No, Sir,' he replied.

'Do you know why in the fifth libation water is called Man\(^2\)?' 'No, Sir,' he replied.

4. 'Then why did you say (you had been) instructed? How could anybody who did not know these things say that he had been instructed?' Then the boy went back sorrowful to the place of his father, and said: 'Though you had not instructed me, Sir, you said you had instructed me.

5. 'That fellow of a Râganya asked me five questions, and I could not answer one of them.' The father said: 'As you have told me these questions of his, I do not know any one of them \(^3\). If I knew these questions, how should I not have told you \(^4\)?'

6. Then Gautama went to the king's place, and when he had come to him, the king offered him proper respect. In the morning the king went out on his way to the assembly \(^5\). The king said to him:

\(^1\) That of the fathers. Comm.

\(^2\) Or, according to others, why the water has a human voice; purushavâkah in Brâh. Âr. XIV, 9, 3.

\(^3\) I doubt whether the elliptical construction of these sentences is properly filled out by the commentator. In the Brâhadâraṇyaka the construction is much easier. 'You know me well enough to know that whatever I know, I told you.'

\(^4\) I read avadishyam, though both the text and commentary give avadishyam. Still viditavân asmi points to an original avadishyam, and a parallel passage, VI, 1, 7, confirms this emendation.

Sir, Gautama, ask a boon of such things as men possess.' He replied: 'Such things as men possess may remain with you. Tell me the speech which you addressed to the boy.'

7. The king was perplexed, and commanded him, saying: 'Stay with me some time.' Then he said: 'As (to what) you have said to me, Gautama, this knowledge did not go to any Brāhmaṇa before you, and therefore this teaching belonged in all the worlds to the Kshatra class alone. Then he began:

FOURTH KHANDA ¹.

1. 'The altar (on which the sacrifice is supposed to be offered) is that world (heaven), O Gautama; its fuel is the sun itself, the smoke his rays, the light the day, the coals the moon, the sparks the stars.

2. 'On that altar the Devas (or prānas, represented by Agni, &c.) offer the sraddhā libation (consisting of water). From that oblation rises Soma, the king ² (the moon).

FIFTH KHANDA.

1. 'The altar is Parganya (the god of rain), O Gautama; its fuel is the air itself, the smoke the cloud, the light the lightning, the coals the thunderbolt, the sparks the thunderings ³.

¹ He answers the last question, why water in the fifth libation is called Man, first.
² The sacrificers themselves rise through their oblations to heaven, and attain as their reward a Soma-like nature.
³ Hrāduni, generally explained by hail, but here by stanayitnusabdāḥ, rumblings.
2. 'On that altar the Devas offer Soma, the king (the moon). From that oblation rises rain 1.

Sixth Khanda.

1. 'The altar is the earth, O Gautama; its fuel is the year itself, the smoke the ether, the light the night, the coals the quarters, the sparks the intermediate quarters.

2. 'On that altar the Devas (prânas) offer rain. From that oblation rises food (corn, &c.)

Seventh Khanda.

1. 'The altar is man, O Gautama 2.

2. 'On that altar the Devas (prânas) offer food. From that oblation rises seed.

Eighth Khanda.

1. 'The altar is woman, O Gautama 2.

2. 'On that altar the Devas (prânas) offer seed. From that oblation rises the germ.

Ninth Khanda.

1. 'For this reason is water in the fifth oblation called Man. This germ, covered in the womb, having dwelt there ten months, or more or less, is born.

2. 'When born, he lives whatever the length of his life may be. When he has departed, his friends carry him, as appointed, to the fire (of the funeral pile) from whence he came, from whence he sprang.

1 The water, which had assumed the nature of Soma, now becomes rain.

2 Tasyā upastha eva samid, yad upamantrayate sa dhûmo, yonir ar̄kīr, yad antaḥ karoti te 'īgārā abhinandā visphuлиngāḥ.
Tenth Khanda.

1. 'Those who know this\(^1\) (even though they still be \textit{gr\'\i}hasthas, householders) and those who in the forest follow faith and austerities (the vâna-prasthas, and of the parivrāgakas those who do not yet know the Highest Brahman) go\(^2\) to light (arākṣis), from light to day, from day to the light half of the moon, from the light half of the moon to the six months when the sun goes to the north, from the six months when the sun goes to the north to the year, from the year to the sun, from the sun to the moon, from the moon to the lightning. There is a person not human\(^3\),—

2. 'He leads them to Brahman (the conditioned Brahman). This is the path of the Devas.

3. 'But they who living in a village practise (a life of) sacrifices, works of public utility, and alms, they go to the smoke, from smoke to night, from night to the dark half of the moon, from the dark half of the moon to the six months when the sun goes to the south. But they do not reach the year.

4. 'From the months they go to the world of the fathers, from the world of the fathers to the ether, from the ether to the moon. That is Soma, the king. Here they are loved (eaten) by the Devas, yes, the Devas love (eat) them\(^4\).

\(^1\) The doctrine of the five fires, and our being born in them, i.e. in heaven, rain, earth, man, and woman.

\(^2\) Cf. \textit{Kh.} Up. IV, 15, 5.

\(^3\) Instead of mānava, human, or amānava, not human, the \textit{Br\'h. \textit{Ar.}} reads māṇasa, mental, or created by manas, mind.

\(^4\) This passage has been translated, 'They are the food of the gods. The gods do eat it.' And this is indeed the literal meaning of the words. But \textit{bhag} (to enjoy) and \textit{bhaksh} (to eat) are often
5. 'Having dwelt there, till their (good) works are consumed, they return again that way as they came\(^1\), to the ether, from the ether to the air. Then the sacrificer, having become air, becomes smoke, having become smoke, he becomes mist,

6. 'Having become mist, he becomes a cloud, having become a cloud, he rains down. Then he is born as rice and corn, herbs and trees, sesamum and beans. From thence the escape is beset with most difficulties. For whoever the persons may be that eat the food, and beget offspring, he henceforth becomes like unto them.

used by theosophical writers in India, in the more general sense of cherishing or loving, and anna in the sense of an object of desire, love, and protection. The commentators, however, as the use of bhaksh in this sense is exceptional, or as it has no support in the use of the ancients, warn us here against a possible misunderstanding. If those, they say, who have performed sacrifices enter at last into the essence of Soma, the moon, and are eaten by the Devas, by Indra, &c., what is the use of their good works? No, they reply, they are not really eaten. Food (anna) means only what is helpful and delightful; it is not meant that they are eaten by morsels, but that they form the delight of the Devas. Thus we hear it said that men, women, and cattle are food for kings. And if it is said that women are loved by men, they are, in being loved, themselves loving. Thus these men also, being loved by the Devas, are happy and rejoice with the Devas. Their body, in order to be able to rejoice in the moon, becomes of a watery substance, as it was said before, that the water, called the Sraddhā libation, when offered in heaven, as in the fire of the altar, becomes Soma, the king (\(K\)h. Up. V, 4, 1). That water becomes, after various changes, the body of those who have performed good works, and when a man is dead and his body burnt (\(K\)h. Up. V, 9, 2), the water rises from the body upwards with the smoke, and carries him to the moon, where, in that body, he enjoys the fruits of his good works, as long as they last. When they are consumed, like the oil in a lamp, he has to return to a new round of existences.

\(^1\) But only to a certain point.

\[3\]
7. "Those whose conduct has been good, will quickly attain some good birth, the birth of a Brâhma, or a Kshatriya, or a Vaisya. But those whose conduct has been evil, will quickly attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog, or a hog, or a Kandâla.

8. "On neither of these two ways those small creatures (flies, worms, &c.) are continually returning of whom it may be said, Live and die. Theirs is a third place.

'Therefore that world never becomes full" (cf. V, 3, 2).

In this manner all the five questions have been answered. First, why in the fifth oblation water is called man; secondly, to what place men go after death, some by the path of the Devas, others by the path of the fathers, others again by neither of these paths; thirdly, how they return, some returning to Brahman, others returning to the earth; fourthly, where the paths of the Devas and the fathers diverge, viz. when from the half-year the path of the Devas goes on to the year, while that of the fathers branches off to the world of the fathers; fifthly, why that world, the other world, does never become full, viz. because men either go on to Brahman or return again to this world.

Many questions are raised among Indian philosophers on the exact meaning of certain passages occurring in the preceding paragraphs. First, as to who is admitted to the path of the Devas? Householders, who know the secret doctrine of the five fires or the five libations of the Agnihotra, as described above, while other householders, who only perform the ordinary sacrifices, without a knowledge of their secret meaning, go by the path of the fathers. Secondly, those who have retired to the forest, and whose worship there consists in faith and austerities, i.e. Vânaprasthas and Parivrâgakas, before they arrive at a knowledge of the true Brahman. The question then arises, whether religious students also enter the path of the Devas? This is affirmed, because Purânas and Smrîtis assert it, or because our text, if properly understood, does not exclude it. Those, on the contrary, who know not only a conditioned, but the highest unconditioned Brahman, do not proceed on the path of the Devas, but obtain Brahman immediately.

Again, there is much difference of opinion whether, after a man
‘Hence let a man take care to himself\(^1\)! And thus it is said in the following Sloka\(^2\):—

9. ‘A man who steals gold, who drinks spirits, has been in the moon, consuming his works, he can be born again. Birth is the result of former works, and if former works are altogether consumed, there can be no new birth. This, however, is shown to be an erroneous view, because, besides the good sacrificial works, the fruits of which are consumed in the moon, there are other works which have to be enjoyed or expiated, as the case may be, in a new existence.

The great difficulty or danger in the round of transmigration arises when the rain has fructified the earth, and passes into herbs and trees, rice, corn, and beans. For, first of all, some of the rain does not fructify at once, but falls into rivers and into the sea, to be swallowed up by fishes and sea monsters. Then, only after these have been dissolved in the sea, and after the sea water has been attracted by the clouds, the rain falls down again, it may be on desert or stony land. Here it may be swallowed by snakes or deer, and these may be swallowed by other animals, so that the round of existence seems endless. Nor is this all. Some rain may dry up, or be absorbed by bodies that cannot be eaten. Then, if the rain is absorbed by rice, corn, &c., and this be eaten, it may be eaten by children or by men who have renounced marriage, and thus again lose the chance of a new birth. Lastly, there is the danger arising from the nature of the being in whom the food, such as rice and corn, becomes a new seed, and likewise from the nature of the mother. All these chances have to be met before a new birth as a Brâhmaṇa, Kshatriya, or Vaisya can be secured.

Another curious distinction is here made by Śaṅkara in his commentary. There are some, he says, who assume the form of rice, corn, &c., not in their descent from a higher world, as described in the Upanishad, but as a definite punishment for certain evil deeds they have committed. These remain in that state till the results of their evil deeds are over, and assume then a new body, according to their work, like caterpillars. With them there is also a consciousness of these states, and the acts which caused them to \(^1\) Let him despise it. Comm.

\(^2\) Evidently an old Trishûbh verse, but irregular in the third line. See Manu XI, 54.
who dishonours his Guru's bed, who kills a Brahman, these four fall, and as a fifth he who associates with them.

10. 'But he who thus knows the five fires is not defiled by sin even though he associates with them. He who knows this, is pure, clean, and obtains the world of the blessed, yea, he obtains the world of the blessed.'

Eleventh Khanda 1.

1. Prākīnasāla Aupamanyava, Satyayāgña Paulu-shi, Indradyumna Bhāllaveya, Gana Sārkarākshya, and Budāla Āsvatārasvi, these five great householders and great theologians came once together and held a discussion as to What is our Self, and what is Brahman 2.

2. They reflected and said: 'Sirs, there is that Uddālaka Āruṇi, who knows at present that Self, assume this or that body, leave impressions behind, like dreams. This is not the case with those who in their descent from the moon, pass, as we saw, through an existence as rice, corn, &c. They have no consciousness of such existences, at least not in their descent. In their ascent to the moon, they have consciousness, as a man who climbs up a tree knows what he is about. But in their descent, that consciousness is gone, as it is when a man falls down from a tree. Otherwise a man, who by his good works had deserved rewards in the moon, would, while corn is being ground, suffer tortures, as if he were in hell, and the very object of good works, as taught by the Veda, would be defeated. As we see that a man struck by a hammer can be carried away unconscious, so it is in the descent of souls, till they are born again as men, and gain a new start for the attainment of the Highest Brahman.

1 The same story is found in the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa X, 6, 1, 1.
2 Ātman and Brahmān are to be taken as predicate and subject.
called Vaisvânara. Well, let us go to him.' They went to him.

3. But he reflected: 'Those great householders and great theologians will examine me, and I shall not be able to tell them all; therefore I shall recommend another teacher to them.'

4. He said to them: 'Sirs, Asvapati Kaikeya knows at present that Self, called Vaisvânara. Well, let us go to him.' They went to him.

5. When they arrived (the king) ordered proper presents to be made separately to each of them. And rising the next morning\(^1\) he said: 'In my kingdom there is no thief, no miser, no drunkard, no man without an altar in his house, no ignorant person, no adulterer, much less an adulteress. I\(^2\) am going to perform a sacrifice, Sirs, and as much wealth as I give to each \textit{Ritvig} priest, I shall give to you, Sirs. Please to stay here.'

6. They replied: 'Every man ought to say for what purpose he comes. You know at present that Vaisvânara Self, tell us that.'

7. He said: 'To-morrow I shall give you an answer.' Therefore on the next morning they approached him, carrying fuel in their hands (like students), and he, without first demanding any preparatory rites\(^3\), said to them:

---

\(^1\) The commentator explains that the king, seeing that they would not accept his presents, and thinking that they did not consider him worthy of bestowing presents on them, made these remarks.

\(^2\) When they still refused his presents, he thought the presents he had offered were too small, and therefore invited them to a sacrifice.

\(^3\) He was satisfied with the humility of the Brahmans, who, being Brahmans, came to him, who was not a Brahman, as pupils. Gene-
Twelfth Khanda.

1. 'Aupamanyava, whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'Heaven only, venerable king.' He said: 'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Sutegas (having good light). Therefore every kind of Soma libation is seen in your house.

2. 'You eat food, and see your desire (a son, &c.), and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food, sees his desire, and has Vedic glory (arising from study and sacrifice) in his house. That, however, is but the head of the Self, and thus your head would have fallen (in a discussion), if you had not come to me.'

Thirteenth Khanda.

1. Then he said to Satyayagna Paulushi: 'O Prâkânyayogya, whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'The sun only, venerable king.' He said: 'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Visvarûpa (multiform). Therefore much and manifold wealth is seen in your house.

2. 'There is a car with mules, full of slaves and jewels. You eat food and see your desire, and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food and sees his desire, and has Vedic glory in his house. 'That, however, is but the eye of the Self, and you would have become blind, if you had not come to me.'

rally a pupil has first to pass through several initiatory rites before he is admitted to the benefit of his master's teaching.

1 Soma is said to be suta in the Ekâha, prasuta in the Ahîna, âsuta in the Sattra-sacrifices.
Fourteenth Khanda.

1. Then he said to Indradyumna Bhallaveya: 'O Vaiyâghrapadaya, whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'Air only, venerable king.' He said: 'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Prithagvartman (having various courses). Therefore offerings come to you in various ways, and rows of cars follow you in various ways.

2. 'You eat food and see your desire, and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food and sees his desire, and has Vedic glory in his house.

'That, however, is but the breath of the Self, and your breath would have left you, if you had not come to me.'

Fifteenth Khanda.

1. Then he said to Gana Sârkarâkshya: 'Whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'Ether only, venerable king.' He said: 'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Bahula (full). Therefore you are full of offspring and wealth.

2. 'You eat food and see your desire, and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food and sees his desire, and has Vedic glory in his house.

'That, however, is but the trunk of the Self, and your trunk would have perished, if you had not come to me.'

Sixteenth Khanda.

1. Then he said to Budila Ásvatarâsvi, 'O Vaiyâghrapadaya, whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'Water only, venerable king.' He said:
'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Rayi (wealth). Therefore are you wealthy and flourishing.

2. 'You eat food and see your desire, and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food and sees his desire, and has Vedic glory in his house.

'That, however, is but the bladder of the Self, and your bladder would have burst, if you had not come to me.'

SEVENTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Then he said to Auddálaka Áruni: 'O Gautama, whom do you meditate on as the Self?' He replied: 'The earth only, venerable king.' He said: 'The Self which you meditate on is the Vaisvânara Self, called Pratishthā (firm rest). Therefore you stand firm with offspring and cattle.

2. 'You eat food and see your desire, and whoever thus meditates on that Vaisvânara Self, eats food and sees his desire, and has Vedic glory in his house.

'That, however, are but the feet of the Self, and your feet would have given way, if you had not come to me.'

EIGHTEENTH KHANDA.

1. Then he said to them all: 'You eat your food, knowing that Vaisvâna Self as if it were many. But he who worships the Vaisvânara Self as a span long, and as \(^1\) identical with himself, he eats food in all worlds, in all beings, in all Selfs.

---

\(^1\) The two words prâderamâtra and abhivimâna are doubtful. The commentator explains the first in different ways, which are all more or less fanciful. He is measured or known (mâtra) as Self,
2. 'Of that Vaiśvānara Self the head is Sutegas (having good light), the eye Visvarūpa (multiform), the breath Prithagvartman (having various courses), the trunk Bahula (full), the bladder Rayi (wealth), the feet the earth, the chest the altar, the hairs the grass on the altar, the heart the Gārhapatyā fire, the mind the Anvāhārya fire, the mouth the Āhavanīya fire.

Nineteenth Khanda.

1. 'Therefore the first food which a man may take, is in the place of Homa. And he who offers that first oblation, shou'd offer it to Prāna (up-breathing), saying Svāhā. Then Prāna (up-breathing) is satisfied,

2. 'If Prāna is satisfied, the eye is satisfied, if the eye is satisfied, the sun is satisfied, if the sun is satisfied, heaven is satisfied, if heaven is satisfied, whatever is under heaven and under the sun is satisfied. And through their satisfaction he (the sacrificer or eater) himself is satisfied with offspring, cattle, health, brightness, and Vedic splendour.

by means of heaven as his head and the earth as his feet, these being the prādeśas; or, in the mouth and the rest, which are instruments, he is known as without action himself; or, he has the length from heaven to earth, heaven and earth being called prādea, because they are taught. The interpretation, supported by the Gābālā-sūti, that prādea is the measure from the forehead to the chin, he rejects. Abhīvimāna is taken in the same meaning as abhīmāna in the Vedānta, seeing everything in oneself. Vaiśvānara is taken as the real Self of all beings, and, in the end, of all Selves, and as thus to be known and worshipped.

1 The object now is to show that to him who knows the Vaiśvānara Self, the act of feeding himself is like feeding Vaiśvānara, and that feeding Vaiśvānara is the true Agnihotra.
1. 'And he who offers the second oblation, should offer it to Vyāna (back-breathing), saying Svāhā. Then Vyāna is satisfied,

2. 'If Vyāna is satisfied, the ear is satisfied, if the ear is satisfied, the moon is satisfied, if the moon is satisfied, the quarters are satisfied, if the quarters are satisfied, whatever is under the quarters and under the moon is satisfied. And through their satisfaction he (the sacrificer or eater) himself is satisfied with offspring, cattle, health, brightness, and Vedic splendour.

20th Khanda.

21st Khanda.

22nd Khanda.
satisfaction he (the sacrificer or eater) himself is satisfied with offspring, cattle, health, brightness, and Vedic splendour.

Twenty-third Khanda.

1. ‘And he who offers the fifth oblation, should offer it to Udāna (out-breathing), saying Svāhā. Then Udāna is satisfied,

2. ‘If Udāna is satisfied, Vāyu (air) is satisfied, if Vāyu is satisfied, ether is satisfied, if ether is satisfied, whatever is under Vāyu and under the ether is satisfied. And through their satisfaction he (the sacrificer or eater) himself is satisfied with offspring, cattle, health, brightness, and Vedic splendour.

Twenty-fourth Khanda.

1. ‘If, without knowing this, one offers an Agnihotra, it would be as if a man were to remove the live coals and pour his libation on dead ashes.

2. ‘But he who offers this Agnihotra with a full knowledge of its true purport, he offers it (i.e. he eats food)¹ in all worlds, in all beings, in all Selfs.

3. ‘As the soft fibres of the Ishikā reed, when thrown into the fire, are burnt, thus all his sins are burnt whoever offers this Agnihotra with a full knowledge of its true purport.

4. ‘Even if he gives what is left of his food to a Kandāla, it would be offered in his (the Kandāla’s) Vaisvānara Self. And so it is said in this Sloka:—

   ‘As hungry children here on earth sit (expectantly) round their mother, so do all beings sit round the Agnihotra, yea, round the Agnihotra.’

¹ Cf. V, 18, 1.
SIXTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANOA.

1. Hari\text{\textk{ê}}, Om. There lived once Svetaketu Ārune\text{\texty}a (the grandson of Aruna). To him his father (Uddálaka, the son of Aruna) said: ‘Svetaketu, go to school; for there is none belonging to our race, darling, who, not having studied (the Veda), is, as it were, a Brāhmaṇa by birth only.’

2. Having begun his apprenticeship (with a teacher) when he was twelve years of age\(^1\), Svetaketu returned to his father, when he was twenty-four, having then studied all the Vedas,—conceited, considering himself well-read, and stern.

3. His father said to him: ‘Svetaketu, as you are so conceited, considering yourself so well-read, and so stern, my dear, have you ever asked for that instruction by which we hear what cannot be heard, by which we perceive what cannot be perceived, by which we know what cannot be known?’

4. ‘What is that instruction, Sir?’ he asked.

The father replied: ‘My dear, as by one clod of clay all that is made of clay is known, the difference\(^2\) being only a name, arising from speech, but the truth being that all is clay;

5. ‘And as, my dear, by one nugget of gold\(^3\)

---

\(^1\) This was rather late, for the son of a Brahman might have begun his studies when he was seven years old. Āpastamba-\text{sū\text{\textt}ras I, 1, 18. Twelve years was considered the right time for mastering one of the Vedas.

\(^2\) Vikâra, difference, variety, change, by form and name, development, cf. VI, 3, 3.

\(^3\) The commentator takes lohamaṇi here as suvarnapinda.
all that is made of gold is known, the difference being only a name, arising from speech, but the truth being that all is gold?

6. 'And as, my dear, by one pair of nail-scissors all that is made of iron (kârshnuîyasam) is known, the difference being only a name, arising from speech, but the truth being that all is iron,—thus, my dear, is that instruction.'

7. The son said: 'Surely those venerable men (my teachers) did not know that. For if they had known it, why should they not have told it me? Do you, Sir, therefore tell me that.' 'Be it so,' said the father.

Second Khanda.²

1. 'In the beginning,' my dear, 'there was that only which is (tû òv), one only, without a second. Others say, in the beginning there was that only which is not (tû ìô òv), one only, without a second; and from that which is not, that which is was born.

2. 'But how could it be thus, my dear?' the father continued. 'How could that which is, be born of that which is not? No, my dear, only that which is, was in the beginning, one only, without a second.

3. 'It thought ², may I be many, may I grow forth. It sent forth fire³.

² Literally, it saw. This verb is explained as showing that the Sat is conscious, not unconscious (bewusst, nicht unbewusst).
³ In other Upanishads the Sat produces first ákâsa, ether, then váyu, air, and then only tegas, fire. Fire is a better rendering for tegas than light or heat. See Jacobi, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenl. Gesellschaft, XXIX, p. 242. The difficulties, however, of ‘That fire thought, may I be many, may I grow forth. It sent forth water.

‘And therefore whenever anybody anywhere is hot and perspires, water is produced on him from fire alone.

4. ‘Water thought, may I be many, may I grow forth. It sent forth earth (food).

‘Therefore whenever it rains anywhere, most food is then produced. From water alone is eatable food produced.

THIRD KHANDA.

1. ‘Of all living things there are indeed three origins only, that which springs from an egg (oviparous), that which springs from a living being (viviparous), and that which springs from a germ.

2. ‘That Being (i.e. that which had produced fire, water, and earth) thought, let me now enter those three beings (fire, water, earth) with this living accurately translating tegas are not removed by rendering it by fire, as may be seen immediately afterward in VI, 4, 1, where tegas is said to supply the red colour of agni, the burning fire, not the god of fire. See also VI, 8, 6. In later philosophical treatises the meaning of tegas is more carefully determined than in the Upanishads.

1 Really the Sat, in the form of fire. Fire is whatever burns, cooks, shines, and is red.

2 By water is meant all that is fluid, and bright in colour.

3 By anna, food, is here meant the earth, and all that is heavy, firm, dark in colour.

4 In the Ait. Up. four are mentioned, andaga, here ândaga, gûruga (i.e. garâyuga), here ãvága, svedaga, and udbhigga, svedaga, born from heat, being additional. Cf. Atharva-veda I, 12, 1.

5 The text has devatâ, deity; here used in a very general sense. The Sat, though it has produced fire, water, and earth, has not yet obtained its wish of becoming many.
Self (gīva åtmā)¹, and let me then reveal (develop) names and forms.

3. 'Then that Being having said, Let me make each of these three tripartite (so that fire, water, and earth should each have itself for its principal ingredient, besides an admixture of the other two) entered into those three beings (devatā) with this living self only, and revealed names and forms.

4. 'He made each of these tripartite; and how these three beings become each of them tripartite, that learn from me now, my friend!

Forth Khanda.

1. 'The red colour of burning fire (agni) is the colour of fire, the white colour of fire is the colour of water, the black colour of fire the colour of earth. Thus vanishes what we call fire, as a mere variety, being a name, arising from speech. What is true (satya) are the three colours (or forms).

2. 'The red colour of the sun (āditya) is the colour of fire, the white of water, the black of earth. Thus vanishes what we call the sun, as a mere variety, being a name, arising from speech. What is true are the three colours.

3. 'The red colour of the moon is the colour of fire, the white of water, the black of earth. Thus vanishes what we call the moon, as a mere variety, being a name, arising from speech. What is true are the three colours.

4. 'The red colour of the lightning is the colour of fire, the white of water, the black of earth. Thus vanishes what we call the lightning, as a mere variety, being a name, arising from speech. What is true are the three colours.

¹ This living self is only a shadow, as it were, of the Highest Self; and as the sun, reflected in the water, does not suffer from the movement of the water, the real Self does not suffer pleasure or pain on earth, but the living self only.

5. 'Great householders and great theologians of olden times who knew this, have declared the same, saying, “No one can henceforth mention to us anything which we have not heard, perceived, or known.” Out of these (three colours or forms) they knew all.

6. 'Whatever they thought looked red, they knew was the colour of fire. Whatever they thought looked white, they knew was the colour of water. Whatever they thought looked black, they knew was the colour of earth.

7. 'Whatever they thought was altogether unknown, they knew was some combination of those three beings (devatā).

'Now learn from me, my friend, how those three beings, when they reach man, become each of them tripartite.

Fifth Khanda.

1. 'The earth (food) when eaten becomes threefold; its grossest portion becomes feces, its middle portion flesh, its subtilest portion mind.

2. 'Water when drunk becomes threefold; its grossest portion becomes water, its middle portion blood, its subtilest portion breath.

3. 'Fire (i.e. in oil, butter, &c.) when eaten becomes threefold; its grossest portion becomes bone, its middle portion marrow, its subtilest portion speech.

1 This reminds one of the Aristotelian διὰ γὰρ ταῦτα καὶ ἐκ τούτων τῶν ἐπιστήμων.

2 Food, water, and fire are each to be taken as tripartite; hence animals which live on one of the three elements only, still share in some measure the qualities of the other elements also.
4. ‘For truly, my child, mind comes of earth, breath of water, speech of fire.’
   ‘Please, Sir, inform me still more,’ said the son.
   ‘Be it so, my child,’ the father replied.

SIXTH KHAN\(\text{DA.}\)

1. ‘That which is the subtile portion of curds, when churned, rises upwards, and becomes butter.
2. ‘In the same manner, my child, the subtile portion of earth (food), when eaten, rises upwards, and becomes mind.
3. ‘That which is the subtile portion of water, when drunk, rises upwards, and becomes breath.
4. ‘That which is the subtile portion of fire, when consumed, rises upwards, and becomes speech.
5. ‘For mind, my child, comes of earth, breath of water, speech of fire.’
   ‘Please, Sir, inform me still more,’ said the son.
   ‘Be it so, my child,’ the father replied.

SEVENTH KHAN\(\text{DA.}\)

1. ‘Man (purusha), my son, consists of sixteen parts. Abstain from food for fifteen days, but drink as much water as you like, for breath comes from water, and will not be cut off, if you drink water.’
2. Svetaketu abstained from food for fifteen days. Then he came to his father and said: ‘What shall I say?’ The father said: ‘Repeat the Rik, Yagus, and Sâman verses.’ He replied: ‘They do not occur to me, Sir.’
3. The father said to him: ‘As of a great lighted fire one coal only of he size of a firefly may be left, which would not burn much more than this (i.e. very little), thus, my dear son, one part only of the sixteen parts (of you) is left, and therefore with that one part you do not remember the Vedas. Go and eat!

4. ‘Then wilt thou understand me.’ Then Svetaketu ate, and afterwards approached his father. And whatever his father asked him, he knew it all by heart. Then his father said to him:

5. ‘As of a great lighted fire one coal of the size of a firefly, if left, may be made to blaze up again by putting grass upon it, and will thus burn more than this,

6. ‘Thus, my dear son, there was one part of the sixteen parts left to you, and that, lighted up with food, burnt up, and by it you remember now the Vedas.’ After that, he understood what his father meant when he said: ‘Mind, my son, comes from food, breath from water, speech from fire.’ He understood what he said, yea, he understood it.

EIGHTH KHANDA.

1. Uddâlaka Âruni said to his son Svetaketu: ‘Learn from me the true nature of sleep (svapna). When a man sleeps here, then, my dear son, he becomes united with the True, he is gone to his

1 The repetition shows that the teaching of the Trîvîkaraṇa, the tripartite nature of things, is ended.

2 The deep sushupta sleep is meant, in which personal consciousness is lost, and the self for a time absorbed in the Highest Self. Sleep is produced by fatigue. Speech, mind, and the senses rest, breath only remains awake, and the gîva, the living soul, in order to recover from his fatigue, returns for a while to his true Self (âtmâ). The Sat must be taken as a substance, nay, as the highest substance or subject, the Brahman. The whole purpose of the Upanishad is obscured if we translate sat or satyam by truth, instead of the True, the true one, тο ὐντων ήν.
own (Self). Therefore they say, svapiti, he sleeps, because he is gone (apita) to his own (sva) ¹.

2. 'As a bird when tied by a string flies first in every direction, and finding no rest anywhere, settles down at last on the very place where it is fastened, exactly in the same manner, my son, that mind (the gīva, or living Self in the mind, see VI, 3, 2), after flying in every direction, and finding no rest anywhere, settles down on breath ²; for indeed, my son, mind is fastened to breath.

3. 'Learn from me, my son, what are hunger and thirst. When a man is thus said to be hungry, water is carrying away (digests) what has been eaten by him. Therefore as they speak of a cow-leader (go-nāya), a horse-leader (asva-nāya), a man-leader (purusha-nāya), so they call water (which digests food and causes hunger) food-leader (asa-nāya). Thus (by food digested &c.), my son, know this offshoot (the body) to be brought forth, for this (body) could not be without a root (cause).

4. 'And where could its root be except in food (earth) ³? And in the same manner, my son, as ¹ This is one of the many recognised plays on words in the Upanishads and the Vedânta philosophy. Svapiti, he sleeps, stands for sva (his own), i.e. the self, and apīta, gone to.

² The commentator takes prāṇa here in the sense of Sat, which it often has elsewhere. If so, this illustration would have the same object as the preceding one. If we took prāṇa in the sense of breath, breath being the result of water, this paragraph might be taken to explain the resignation of the living Self to its bondage to breath, while on earth.

³ That food is the root of the body is shown by the commentator in the following way: Food when softened by water and digested becomes a fluid, blood (sonita). From it comes flesh, from flesh fat, from fat bones, from bones marrow, from marrow seed. Food eaten by a woman becomes equally blood (lohitā), food (earth) too is an offshoot, seek after its root, viz. water. And as water too is an offshoot, seek after its root, viz. fire. And as fire too is an offshoot, seek after its root, viz. the True. Yes, all these creatures, my son, have their root in the True, they dwell in the True, they rest in the True.

5. 'When a man is thus said to be thirsty, fire carries away what has been drunk by him. Therefore as they speak of a cow-leader (go-nâya), of a horse-leader (aśva-nâya), of a man-leader (purushanâya), so they call fire udanyâ, thirst, i.e. water-leader. Thus (by water digested &c.), my son, know this offshoot (the body) to be brought forth: this (body) could not be without a root (cause).

6. 'And where could its root be except in water? As water is an offshoot, seek after its root, viz. fire. As fire is an offshoot, seek after its root, viz. the True. Yes, all these creatures, O son, have their root in the True, they dwell in the True, they rest in the True.

'And how these three beings (devatâ), fire, water, earth, O son, when they reach man, become each of them tripartite, has been said before (VI, 4, 7). When a man departs from hence, his speech 1 is merged and from seed and blood combined the new body is produced. We must always have before us the genealogical table:—

Sat, ṛō Ṛv.

| Tegas (fire) = Vâk (speech). |
| Ap (water) = Prâna (breath). |
| Anna (earth) = Manas (mind). |

1 If a man dies, the first thing which his friends say is, He speaks no more. Then, he understands no more. Then, he moves no more. Then, he is cold.
in his mind, his mind in his breath, his breath in heat (fire), heat in the Highest Being.

7. 'Now that which is that subtile essence (the root of all), in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.

'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

Ninth Khanda.

1. 'As the bees¹, my son, make honey by collecting the juices of distant trees, and reduce the juice into one form,

2. 'And as these juices have no discrimination, so that they might say, I am the juice of this tree or that, in the same manner, my son, all these creatures, when they have become merged in the True (either in deep sleep or in death), know not that they are merged in the True.

3. 'Whatever these creatures are here, whether a lion, or a wolf, or a boar, or a worm, or a midge, or a gnat, or a musquito, that they become again and again.

4. 'Now that which is that subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.

'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

¹ At the beginning of each chapter the commentator supplies the question which the son is supposed to have asked his father. The first is: All creatures falling every day into deep sleep (su-shupti) obtain thereby the Sat, the true being. How is it then that they do not know that they obtain the Sat every day?
Tenth Khanda 1.

1. 'These rivers, my son, run, the eastern (like the Ganga) toward the east, the western (like the Sindhu) toward the west. They go from sea to sea (i.e. the clouds lift up the water from the sea to the sky, and send it back as rain to the sea). They become indeed sea. And as those rivers, when they are in the sea, do not know, I am this or that river,

2. 'In the same manner, my son, all these creatures, when they have come back from the True, know not that they have come back from the True. Whatever these creatures are here, whether a lion, or a wolf, or a boar, or a worm, or a midge, or a gnat, or a musquito, that they become again and again.

3. 'That which is that subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.
'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

Eleventh Khanda 2.

1. 'If some one were to strike at the root of this large tree here, it would bleed, but live. If he were to strike at its stem, it would bleed, but live. If he were to strike at its top, it would bleed, but live.

1 The next question which the son is supposed to have asked is: If a man who has slept in his own house, rises and goes to another village, he knows that he has come from his own house. Why then do people not know that they have come from the Sat?

2 The next question is: Waves, foam, and bubbles arise from the water, and when they merge again in the water, they are gone. How is it that living beings, when in sleep or death they are merged again in the Sat, are not destroyed?
Pervaded by the living Self that tree stands firm, drinking in its nourishment and rejoicing;

2. 'But if the life (the living Self) leaves one of its branches, that branch withers; if it leaves a second, that branch withers; if it leaves a third, that branch withers. If it leaves the whole tree, the whole tree withers. In exactly the same manner, my son, know this.' Thus he spoke:

3. 'This (body) indeed withers and dies when the living Self has left it; the living Self dies not.

'That which is that subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, Svetaketu, art it.'

'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.

'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

1 The commentator remarks that according to the Veda, trees are conscious, while Buddhists and followers of Kanâda hold them to be unconscious. They live, because one sees how their sap runs and how it dries up, just as one sees the sap in a living body, which, as we saw, was produced by food and water. Therefore the simile holds good. The life, or, more correctly, the liver, the living Self, pervades the tree, as it pervades man, when it has entered the organism which produces breath, mind, and speech. If any accident happens to a branch, the living Self draws himself away from that branch, and then the branch withers. The sap which caused the living Self to remain, goes, and the living Self goes away with it. The same applies to the whole tree. The tree dies when the living Self leaves it, but the living Self does not die; it only leaves an abode which it had before occupied. Some other illustrations, to show that the living Self remains, are added by the commentator: First, with regard to the living Self being the same when it awakes from deep sleep (sushupti), he remarks that we remember quite well that we have left something unfinished before we fell asleep. And then with regard to the living Self being the same when it awakes from death to a new life, he shows that creatures, as soon as they are born take the breast, and exhibit terror, which can only be explained, as he supposes, by their possessing a recollection of a former state of existence.
Twelfth Khanda 1.

1. ‘Fetch me from thence a fruit of the Nyagrodha tree.’
   ‘Here is one, Sir.’
   ‘Break it.’
   ‘It is broken, Sir.’
   ‘What do you see there?’
   ‘These seeds, almost infinitesimal.’
   ‘Break one of them.’
   ‘It is broken, Sir.’
   ‘What do you see there?’
   ‘Not anything, Sir.’

2. The father said: ‘My son, that subtile essence which you do not perceive there, of that very essence this great Nyagrodha tree exists.

3. ‘Believe it, my son. That which is the subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.’
   ‘Please, Sir, inform me still more,’ said the son.
   ‘Be it so, my child,’ the father replied.

Thirteenth Khanda 2.

1. ‘Place this salt in water, and then wait on me in the morning.’
   The son did as he was commanded.
   The father said to him: ‘Bring me the salt, which you placed in the water last night.’

---

1 The question which the son is supposed to have asked is: How can this universe which has the form and name of earth &c. be produced from the Sat which is subtile, and has neither form nor name?

2 The question here is supposed to have been: If the Sat is the root of all that exists, why is it not perceived?
The son having looked for it, found it not, for, of course, it was melted.

2. The father said: 'Taste it from the surface of the water. How is it?'
   The son replied: 'It is salt.'
   'Taste it from the middle. How is it?'
   The son replied: 'It is salt.'
   'Taste it from the bottom. How is it?'
   The son replied: 'It is salt.'
   The father said: 'Throw it away and then wait on me.'

He did so; but salt exists for ever.

Then the father said: 'Here also, in this body, forsooth, you do not perceive the True (Sat), my son; but there indeed it is.

3. 'That which is the subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

   'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.
   'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

FOURTEENTH KHANDA.

1. 'As one might lead a person with his eyes covered away from the Gandhāras, and leave him

---

1 Read abhiprāṣya, which is evidently intended by the commentary: abhiprāyasya parityagya. See B. R. Sanskrit Dictionary, s. v.

2 The question here asked is: The salt, though no longer perceptible by means of sight or touch, could be discovered by taste. Then how can the Sat be discovered, although it is imperceptible by all the senses?

3 The Gandhāras, but rarely mentioned in the Rig-veda and the Ait. Brāhmaṇa, have left their name in Kāvāpou and Candahar. The fact of their name being evidently quite familiar to the author of the Upanishad might be used to prove either its antiquity or its Northern origin.
then in a place where there are no human beings; and as that person would turn towards the east, or the north, or the west, and shout, "I have been brought here with my eyes covered, I have been left here with my eyes covered,"

2. 'And as thereupon some one might loose his bandage and say to him, "Go in that direction, it is Gandhâra, go in that direction;" and as thereupon, having been informed and being able to judge for himself, he would by asking his way from village to village arrive at last at Gandhâra,—in exactly the same manner does a man, who meets with a teacher to inform him, obtain the true knowledge\(^1\). For him

\(^1\) Tediuous as the commentator is in general, he is sometimes almost eloquent in bringing out all that is implied or supposed to be implied in the sacred text. He explains the last simile as follows: A man was carried away by robbers from his own country. After his eyes had been covered, he was taken to a forest full of terrors and dangers arising from tigers, robbers, &c. Not knowing where he was, and suffering from hunger and thirst, he began to cry, wishing to be delivered from his bonds. Then a man took pity on him and removed his bonds, and when he had returned to his home, he was happy. Next follows the application. Our real home is the True (Sat), the Self of the world. The forest into which we are driven is the body, made of the three elements, fire, water, earth, consisting of blood, flesh, bones, &c., and liable to cold, heat, and many other evils. The bands with which our eyes are covered are our desires for many things, real or unreal, such as wife, children, cattle, &c., while the robbers by whom we are driven into the forest are our good and evil deeds. Then we cry and say: 'I am the son of so and so, these are my relatives, I am happy, I am miserable, I am foolish, I am wise, I am just, I am born, I am dead, I am old, I am wretched, my son is dead, my fortune is gone, I am undone, how shall I live, where shall I go, who will save me?' These and hundreds and thousands of other evils are the bands which blind us. Then, owing to some supererogatory good works we may have done, we suddenly meet a man who knows the Self of Brahman, whose own bonds have been broken, who takes pity on us and shows us the way to see the evil which attaches to all there is only delay so long as he is not delivered (from the body); then he will be perfect 1.

3. 'That which is the subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

'Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.

'Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

Fifteenth Khanda 2.

1. 'If a man is ill, his relatives assemble round him and ask: "Dost thou know me? Dost thou know me?" Now as long as his speech is not that we love in this world. We then withdraw ourselves from all worldly pleasures. We learn that we are not mere creatures of the world, the son of so and so, &c., but that we are that which is the True (Sat). The bands of our ignorance and blindness are removed, and, like the man of Gandhāra, we arrive at our own home, the Self, or the True. Then we are happy and blessed.

1 The last words are really—'for him there is only delay so long as I shall not be delivered; then I shall be perfect.' This requires some explanation. First of all, the change from the third to the first person, is best explained by assuming that at the point where all individuality vanishes, the father, as teacher, identifies himself with the person of whom he is speaking.

The delay (the kīra or kshepa) of which he speaks is the time which passes between the attainment of true knowledge and death, or freedom from the effects of actions performed before the attainment of knowledge. The actions which led to our present embodiment must be altogether consumed, before the body can perish, and then only are we free. As to any actions performed after the attainment of knowledge, they do not count; otherwise there would be a new embodiment, and the attainment of even true knowledge would never lead to final deliverance.

2 The question supposed to be asked is: By what degrees a man, who has been properly instructed in the knowledge of Brahmā, obtains the Sat, or returns to the True. To judge from the text both he who knows the True and he who does not, reach, when they die, the Sat, passing from speech to mind and breath and heat (fire). But whereas he who knows, remains in the Sat, they who do not merged in his mind, his mind in breath, breath in heat (fire), heat in the Highest Being (devatâ), he knows them.

2. 'But when his speech is merged in his mind, his mind in breath, breath in heat (fire), heat in the Highest Being, then he knows them not.

' That which is the subtile essence, in it all that exists has its self. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.'

' Please, Sir, inform me still more,' said the son.

' Be it so, my child,' the father replied.

Sixteenth Khanda.

1. 'My child, they bring a man hither whom they have taken by the hand, and they say: "H has taken something, he has committed a theft." (When know, return again to a new form of existence. It is important to observe that the commentator denies that he who knows, passes at his death through the artery of the head to the sun, and then to the Sat. He holds that with him who knows there is no further cause for delay, and that as soon as he dies, he returns to the Sat.

1 The next question is: Why does he who knows, on obtaining the Sat, not return, while he who does not know, though obtaining the Sat in death, returns? An illustration is chosen which is intended to show how knowledge produces a material effect. The belief in the efficacy of ordeals must have existed at the time, and appealing to that belief, the teacher says that the man who knows himself guilty, is really burnt by the heated iron, while the man who knows himself innocent, is not. In the same manner the man who knows his Self to be the true Self, on approaching after death the true Self, is not repelled and sent back into a new existence, while he who does not know, is sent back into a new round of births and deaths. The man who tells a falsehood about himself, loses his true Self and is burnt; the man who has a false conception about his Self, loses likewise his true Self, and not knowing the true Self, even though approaching it in death, he has to suffer till he acquires some day the true knowledge.
he denies, they say), "Heat the hatchet for him." If he committed the theft, then he makes himself to be what he is not. Then the false-minded, having covered his true Self by a falsehood, grasps the heated hatchet— he is burnt, and he is killed.

2. 'But if he did not commit the theft, then he makes himself to be what he is. Then the true-minded, having covered his true Self by truth, grasps the heated hatchet—he is not burnt, and he is delivered.

'As that (truthful) man is not burnt, thus has all that exists its self in That. It is the True. It is the Self, and thou, O Svetaketu, art it.' He understood what he said, yea, he understood it.

SEVENTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Nârada approached Sanatkumâra and said, 'Teach me, Sir!' Sanatkumâra said to him: 'Please to tell me what you know; afterward I shall tell you what is beyond.'

2. Nârada said: 'I know the Rig-veda, Sir, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda, as the fourth the Âtharvâna, as the fifth the Itihâsa-purâna (the Bhârata); the Veda of the Vedas (grammar); the Pitrya (the rules for the sacrifices for the ancestors); the Râsi (the science of numbers); the Daiva (the science of portents); the Nidhi (the science of time); the Vâkovâkya (logic); the Ekâyana (ethics); the Devavidyâ (etymology); the Brahma-vidyâ (pronunciation, sikhâ, ceremonial, kalpa, prosody, kÂandas); the Bhûta-vidyâ (the science of demons); the Kshatra-vidyā (the science of weapons); the Nakshatra-vidyā (astronomy); the Sarpa and Devāgana-vidyā (the science of serpents or poisons, and the sciences of the genii, such as the making of perfumes, dancing, singing, playing, and other fine arts). All this I know, Sir.

3. 'But, Sir, with all this I know the Mantras only, the sacred books, I do not know the Self. I have heard from men like you, that he who knows the Self overcomes grief. I am in grief. Do, Sir, help me over this grief of mine.'

Sanatkumāra said to him: 'Whatever you have read, is only a name.

4. 'A name is the Rig-veda, Yāgur-veda, Sāma-veda, and as the fourth the Ātharvāna, as the fifth the Itihāsa-purāṇa, the Veda of the Vedas, the Pitrya, the Rāsi, the Daiva, the Nidhi, the Vāko-vākya, the Ekāyana, the Deva-vidyā, the Brahma-vidyā, the Bhūta-vidyā, the Kshatra-vidyā, the Nakshatra-vidyā, the Sarpa and Devāgana-vidyā. All these are a name only. Meditate on the name.

5. 'He who meditates on the name as Brahman

---

1 This passage, exhibiting the sacred literature as known at the time, should be compared with the Brāhadāraṇyaka, II, 4, 10. The explanation of the old titles rests on the authority of Saṅkara, and he is not always consistent. See Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, 1873, II, p. 10.

2 Why a man who knows the Veda should not know the Self, while in other places it is said that the Veda teaches the Self, is well illustrated by the commentary. If a royal procession approaches, he says, then, though we do not see the king, because he is hidden by flags, parasols, &c., yet we say, there is the king. And if we ask who is the king, then again, though we cannot see him and point him out, we can say, at least, that he is different from all that is seen. The Self is hidden in the Veda as a king is hidden in a royal procession.
is, as it were, lord and master as far as the name reaches—he who meditates on the name as Brahma.'

'Sir, is there something better than a name?'

'Yes, there is something better than a name.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

SECOND KHANDA.

1. 'Speech is better than a name. Speech makes us understand the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, Sama-veda, and as the fourth the Atharvansa, as the fifth the Itihasa-parava, the Veda of the Vedas, the Pitrya, the Rasi, the Daiva, the Nidhi, the Vakovakya, the Ekayana, the Deva-vidya, the Brahma-vidya, the Kshatra-vidya, the Nakshatra-vidya, the Sarpa and Devagana-vidya; heaven, earth, air, ether, water, fire, gods, men, cattle, birds, herbs, trees, all beasts down to worms, midges, and ants; what is right and what is wrong; what is true and what is false; what is good and what is bad; what is pleasing and what is not pleasing. For if there were no speech, neither right nor wrong would be known, neither the true nor the false, neither the good nor the bad, neither the pleasant nor the unpleasant. Speech makes us understand all this. Meditate on speech.

2. 'He who meditates on speech as Brahman, is, as it were, lord and master as far as speech reaches—he who meditates on speech as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than speech?'

'Yes, there is something better than speech.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

---

1 The commentator explains vyaagnapayishyat by avignatat abhavishyat. Possibly hrdayagno stands for hrdayaagnam.
Third Khanda.

1. 'Mind (manas) is better than speech. For as the closed fist holds two amalaka or two kola or two aksha fruits, thus does mind hold speech and name. For if a man is minded in his mind to read the sacred hymns, he reads them; if he is minded in his mind to perform any actions, he performs them; if he is minded to wish for sons and cattle, he wishes for them; if he is minded to wish for this world and the other, he wishes for them. For mind is indeed the self¹, mind is the world, mind is Brahman. Meditate on the mind.

2. 'He who meditates on the mind as Brahman, is, as it were, lord and master as far as the mind reaches—he who meditates on the mind as Brahman.'
   'Sir, is there something better than mind?'
   'Yes, there is something better than mind.'
   'Sir, tell it me.'

Fourth Khanda.

1. 'Will² (sāṅkalpa) is better than mind. For when a man wills, then he thinks in his mind, then he sends forth speech, and he sends it forth in a name. In a name the sacred hymns are contained, in the sacred hymns all sacrifices.

2. 'All these therefore (beginning with mind and

¹ The commentator explains this by saying that, without the instrument of the mind, the Self cannot act or enjoy.

² Sāṅkalpa is elsewhere defined as a modification of manas. The commentator says that, like thinking, it is an activity of the inner organ. It is difficult to find any English term exactly corresponding to sāṅkalpa. Rajendralal Mitra translates it by will, but it implies not only will, but at the same time conception, determination, and desire.
ending in sacrifice) centre in will, consist of will, abide in will. Heaven and earth willed, air and ether willed, water and fire willed. Through the will of heaven and earth &c. rain wills; through the will of rain food wills; through the will of food the vital airs will; through the will of the vital airs the sacred hymns will; through the will of the sacred hymns the sacrifices will; through the will of the sacrifices the world (as their reward) wills; through the will of the world everything wills. This is will. Meditate on will.

3. 'He who meditates on will as Brahman, he, being himself safe, firm, and undistressed, obtains the safe, firm, and undistressed worlds which he has willed; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as will reaches—he who meditates on will as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than will?'

'Yes, there is something better than will.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

FIFTH KHANDA.

1. 'Consideration (kītta)² is better than will. For when a man considers, then he wills, then he thinks in his mind, then he sends forth speech, and he sends it forth in a name. In a name the sacred hymns are contained, in the sacred hymns all sacrifices.

---

¹ This paragraph is obscure. The text seems doubtful, for instance, in samakātipatām, samakalpetām, and samakalpatām. Then the question is the exact meaning of samkāiptyai, which must be taken as an instrumental case. What is intended is that, without rain, food is impossible &c. or inconceivable; but the text says, 'By the will of rain food wills,' &c. Will seems almost to be taken here in the sense in which modern philosophers use it, as a kind of creative will. By the will of rain food wills, would mean, that first rain wills and exists, and afterwards the vital airs will and exist, &c.

² Kītta, thought, implies here consideration and reflection.

2. 'All these (beginning with mind and ending in sacrifice) centre in consideration, consist of consideration, abide in consideration. Therefore if a man is inconsiderate, even if he possesses much learning, people say of him, he is nothing, whatever he may know; for, if he were learned, he would not be so inconsiderate. But if a man is considerate, even though he knows but little, to him indeed do people listen gladly. Consideration is the centre, consideration is the self, consideration is the support of all these. Meditate on consideration.

3. 'He who meditates on consideration as Brahman, he, being himself safe, firm, and undistressed, obtains the safe, firm, and undistressed worlds which he has considered; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as consideration reaches—he who meditates on consideration as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than consideration?'

'Yes, there is something better than consideration.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

SIXTH KHANDA.

1. 'Reflection (dhyāna)¹ is better than consideration. The earth reflects, as it were, and thus does the sky, the heaven, the water, the mountains, gods and men. Therefore those who among men obtain greatness here on earth, seem to have obtained a part of the object of reflection (because they show a certain repose of manner). Thus while small and vulgar people are always quarrelling, abusive, and slandering, great men seem to have obtained a part of the reward of reflection. Meditate on reflection.

¹ Reflection is concentration of all our thoughts on one object, ekāgratā. And as a man who reflects and meditates on the highest objects acquires thereby repose, becomes firm and immovable, so the earth is supposed to be in repose and immovable, as it were, by reflection and meditation.

2. 'He who meditates on reflection as Brahman, is lord and master, as it were, as far as reflection reaches—he who meditates on reflection as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than reflection?'

'Yes, there is something better than reflection.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

Seventh KhandA.

1. 'Understanding (vigñâna) is better than reflection. Through understanding we understand the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda, and as the fourth the Ātharvâna, as the fifth the Itihâsa-purâna, the Veda of the Vedas, the Pitrya, the Râsi, the Daiva, the Nidhi, the Vâkovâkya, the Ekâyana, the Deva-vidyâ, the Brahma-vidyâ, the Bhûta-vidyâ, the Kshatra-vidyâ, the Nakshatra-vidyâ, the Sarpa and Devagana-vidyâ, heaven, earth, air, ether, water, fire, gods, men, cattle, birds, herbs, trees, all beasts down to worms, midges, and ants; what is right and what is wrong; what is true and what is false; what is good and what is bad; what is pleasing and what is not pleasing; food and savour, this world and that, all this we understand through understanding. Meditate on understanding.

2. 'He who meditates on understanding as Brahman, reaches the worlds where there is understanding.
and knowledge 1; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as understanding reaches—he who meditates on understanding as Brahman.

'Sir, is there something better than understanding?'

'Yes, there is something better than understanding.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

EIGHTH KHANDA.

1. 'Power (bala) is better than understanding. One powerful man shakes a hundred men of understanding. If a man is powerful, he becomes a rising man. If he rises, he becomes a man who visits wise people. If he visits, he becomes a follower of wise people. If he follows them, he becomes a seeing, a hearing, a perceiving, a knowing, a doing, an understanding man. By power the earth stands firm, and the sky, and the heaven, and the mountains, gods and men, cattle, birds, herbs, trees, all beasts down to worms, midges, and ants; by power the world stands firm. Meditate on power.

2. 'He who meditates on power as Brahman, is, as it were, lord and master as far as power reaches—he who meditates on power as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than power?'

'Yes, there is something better than power.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

NINTH KHANDA.

1. 'Food (anna) is better than power. Therefore if a man abstain from food for ten days, though he live, he would be unable to see, hear, perceive, think, act, and understand. But when he obtains

---

1 The commentator takes viññāna here as understanding of sacred books, gñāna as cleverness with regard to other subjects.
food, he is able to see, hear, perceive, think, act, and understand. Meditate on food.

2. 'He who meditates on food as Brahman, obtains the worlds rich in food and drink; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as food reaches—he who meditates on food as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than food?'

'Yes, there is something better than food.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

TENTH KHANDA.

1. 'Water (ap) is better than food. Therefore if there is not sufficient rain, the vital spirits fail from fear that there will be less food. But if there is sufficient rain, the vital spirits rejoice, because there will be much food. This water, on assuming different forms, becomes this earth, this sky, this heaven, the mountains, gods and men, cattle, birds, herbs and trees, all beasts down to worms, midges, and ants. Water indeed assumes all these forms. Meditate on water.

2. 'He who meditates on water as Brahman, obtains all wishes, he becomes satisfied; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as water reaches—he who meditates on water as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than water?'

'Yes, there is something better than water.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

ELEVENTH KHANDA.

1. 'Fire (tegas) is better than water. For fire united with air, warms the ether. Then people say, It is hot, it burns, it will rain. Thus does fire, after showing this sign (itself) first, create water. And thus again thunderclaps come with lightnings, flashing upwards and across the sky. Then people say, There is lightning and thunder, it will rain. Then also does fire, after showing this sign first, create water. Meditate on fire.

2. 'He who meditates on fire as Brahman, obtains, resplendent himself, resplendent worlds, full of light and free of darkness; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as fire reaches—he who meditates on fire as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than fire?'

'Yes, there is something better than fire.'

'Sir, tell it me.'

TWELFTH KHANDA.

1. 'Ether (or space) is better than fire. For in the ether exist both sun and moon, the lightning, stars, and fire (agni). Through the ether we call, through the ether we hear, through the ether we answer. In the ether or space we rejoice (when we are together), and rejoice not (when we are separated). In the ether everything is born, and towards the ether everything tends when it is born. Meditate on ether.

2. 'He who meditates on ether as Brahman, obtains the worlds of ether and of light, which are free from pressure and pain, wide and spacious; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as ether reaches—he who meditates on ether as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than ether?'

2 The seed grows upwards towards the ether; not downwards.
'Yes, there is something better than ether.'
'Sir, tell it me.'

Thirteenth Khanda.

1. 'Memory' (smara) is better than ether. Therefore where many are assembled together, if they have no memory, they would hear no one, they would not perceive, they would not understand. Through memory we know our sons, through memory our cattle. Meditate on memory.

2. 'He who meditates on memory as Brahman, is, as it were, lord and master as far as memory reaches—he who meditates on memory as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than memory?'
'Yes, there is something better than memory.'
'Sir, tell it me.'

Fourteenth Khanda.

1. 'Hope (ásá) is better than memory. Fired by hope does memory read the sacred hymns, perform sacrifices, desire sons and cattle, desire this world and the other. Meditate on hope.

2. 'He who meditates on hope as Brahman, all his desires are fulfilled by hope, his prayers are not in vain; he is, as it were, lord and master as far as hope reaches—he who meditates on hope as Brahman.'

'Sir, is there something better than hope?'
'Yes, there is something better than hope.'
'Sir, tell it me.'

---

1 The apparent distance between ether and memory is bridged over by the commentator pointing out that without memory everything would be as if it were not, so far as we are concerned.
Fifteenth Khanda.

1. 'Spirit' (prāṇa) is better than hope. As the spokes of a wheel hold to the nave, so does all this (beginning with names and ending in hope) hold to spirit. That spirit moves by the spirit, it gives spirit to the spirit. Father means spirit, mother is spirit, brother is spirit, sister is spirit, tutor is spirit, Brāhmaṇa is spirit.

2. 'For if one says anything unbecoming to a father, mother, brother, sister, tutor or Brāhmaṇa, then people say, Shame on thee! thou hast offended thy father, mother, brother, sister, tutor, or a Brāhmaṇa.

3. 'But, if after the spirit has departed from them, one shoves them together with a poker, and burns them to pieces, no one would say, Thou offendest thy father, mother, brother, sister, tutor, or a Brāhmaṇa.

4. 'Spirit then is all this. He who sees this, perceives this, and understands this, becomes an ativādin. If people say to such a man, Thou

---

1 Prāṇa is used here in a technical sense. It does not mean simply breath, but the spirit, the conscious self (prāgñātman) which, as we saw, enters the body in order to reveal the whole variety of forms and names. It is in one sense the mukhya prāṇa.

2 The commentary carries the simile still further. The felloe, he says, holds to the spokes, the spokes to the nave. So do the bhūtāvatras hold to the prāgñāmatras, and these to the prāṇa.

3 One who declares something that goes beyond all the declarations made before, beginning with the declaration that names are Brahman, and ending with the declaration that hope is Brahman;—one who knows that prāṇa, spirit, the conscious self, is Brahman. This declaration represents the highest point reached by ordinary people, but Nārada wishes to go beyond. In the Mundaka, III, 1, 4, an ativādin is contrasted with one who really knows the highest truth.
art an ativádin, he may say, I am an ativádin; he need not deny it.'

Sixteenth Khanda.

1. ‘But in reality he is an ativádin who declares the Highest Being to be the True (Satya, τὸ ὀντός ὄν).’

‘Sir, may I become an ativádin by the True?’
‘But we must desire to know the True.’
‘Sir, I desire to know the True.’

Seventeenth Khanda.

1. ‘When one understands the True, then one declares the True. One who does not understand it, does not declare the True. Only he who understands it, declares the True. This understanding, however, we must desire to understand.’

‘Sir, I desire to understand it.’

Eighteenth Khanda.

1. ‘When one perceives, then one understands. One who does not perceive, does not understand. Only he who perceives, understands. This perception, however, we must desire to understand.’

‘Sir, I desire to understand it.’

---

1 As Nárada asks no further, whether there is anything better, higher, truer than práva, he is supposed to be satisfied with his belief that práva is the Highest Being. Sanatkumára, however, wishes to lead him on to a still higher view; hence the paragraphs which follow from 16 to 26.

2 He would, for instance, call fire real, not knowing that fire is only a mixture of the three elements (cf. VI, 4), the rúpatraya, a mere variety (vikára), and name (náman).
NINETEENTH KHANDA.

1. 'When one believes, then one perceives. One who does not believe, does not perceive. Only he who believes, perceives. This belief, however, we must desire to understand.'

'Sir, I desire to understand it.'

TWENTIETH KHANDA.

1. 'When one attends on a tutor (spiritual guide), then one believes. One who does not attend on a tutor, does not believe. Only he who attends, believes. This attention on a tutor, however, we must desire to understand.'

'Sir, I desire to understand it.'

TWENTY-FIRST KHANDA.

1. 'When one performs all sacred duties, then one attends really on a tutor. One who does not perform his duties, does not really attend on a tutor. Only he who performs his duties, attends on his tutor. This performance of duties, however, we must desire to understand.'

'Sir, I desire to understand it.'

TWENTY-SECOND KHANDA.

1. 'When one obtains bliss (in oneself), then one performs duties. One who does not obtain bliss, does not perform duties. Only he who obtains bliss, performs duties. This bliss, however, we must desire to understand.'

'Sir, I desire to understand it.'

1 The duties of a student, such as restraint of the senses, concentration of the mind, &c.
Twenty-third Khanda.

1. 'The Infinite (bhûman)\(^1\) is bliss. There is no bliss in anything finite. Infinity only is bliss. This Infinity, however, we must desire to understand.'

'Sir, I desire to understand it.'

Twenty-fourth Khanda.

1. 'Where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else, that is the Infinite. Where one sees something else, hears something else, understands something else, that is the finite. The Infinite is immortal, the finite is mortal.'

'Sir, in what does the Infinite rest?'

'In its own greatness—or not even in greatness\(^2\).'</n
2. 'In the world they call cows and horses, elephants and gold, slaves, wives, fields and houses greatness. I do not mean this,' thus he spoke; 'for in that case one being (the possessor) rests in something else, (but the Infinite cannot rest in something different from itself.)

Twenty-fifth Khanda.

1. 'The Infinite indeed is below, above, behind, before, right and left—it is indeed all this.

'Now follows the explanation of the Infinite as \(^1\) Bhûman is sometimes translated by grandeur, the superlative, the akme. It is the highest point that can be reached, the infinite and the true.

\(^2\) This phrase reminds one of the last verse in the No sad āsîd hymn, where, likewise, the expression of the highest certainty is followed by a misgiving that after all it may be otherwise. The commentator takes yadi vá in the sense of, If you ask in the highest sense, then I say no; for the Infinite cannot rest in anything, not even in greatness.'
the I: I am below, I am above, I am behind, before, right and left—I am all this.

2. 'Next follows the explanation of the Infinite as the Self: Self is below, above, behind, before, right and left—Self is all this.

'He who sees, perceives, and understands this, loves the Self, delights in the Self, revels in the Self—he becomes a Svarâg; (an autocrat or self-ruler); he is lord and master in all the worlds.

'But those who think differently from this, live in perishable worlds, and have other beings for their rulers.

Twenty-sixth Khandâ.

1. 'To him who sees, perceives, and understands this ¹, the spirit (prâna) springs from the Self, hope springs from the Self, memory springs from the Self; so do ether, fire, water, appearance and disappearance ², food, power, understanding, reflection, consideration, will, mind, speech, names, sacred hymns, and sacrifices—aye, all this springs from the Self.

2. 'There is this verse, "He who sees this, does not see death, nor illness, nor pain; he who sees this, sees everything, and obtains everything everywhere.

"'He is one (before creation), he becomes three

¹ Before the acquirement of true knowledge, all that has been mentioned before, spirit, hope, memory, &c., on to names, was supposed to spring from the Sat, as something different from oneself. Now he is to know that the Sat is the Self.

² In the preceding paragraphs appearance and disappearance (birth and death) are not mentioned. This shows how easy it was in these treatises either to omit or to add anything that seemed important.
(fire, water, earth), he becomes five, he becomes seven, he becomes nine; then again he is called the eleventh, and hundred and ten and one thousand and twenty\(^1\).

'When the intellectual aliment has been purified, the whole nature becomes purified. When the whole nature has been purified, the memory becomes firm. And when the memory (of the Highest Self) remains firm, then all the ties (which bind us to a belief in anything but the Self) are loosened.

'The venerable Sanatkumāra showed to Nārada, after his faults had been rubbed out, the other side of darkness. They call Sanatkumāra Skanda, yea, Skanda they call him.'

---

EIGHTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

FIRST KHANDA\(^2\).

1. Hariḥ, Om. There is this city of Brahman (the body), and in it the palace, the small lotus (of

---

\(^1\) This too is meant as a verse. The commentary says that the various numbers are intended to show the endless variety of form on the Self after creation. Cf. Mait. Up. V, 2.

\(^2\) The eighth Prapâthaka seems to form a kind of appendix to the Upanishad. The highest point that can be reached by speculation had been reached in the seventh Prapâthaka, the identity of our self and of everything else with the Highest Self. This speculative effort, however, is too much for ordinary people. They cannot conceive the Sat or Brahman as out of space and time, as free from all qualities, and in order to help them, they are taught to adore the Brahman, as it appears in space and time, an object endowed with certain qualities, living in nature and in the human heart. The Highest Brahman, besides which there is nothing, and which can neither be reached as an object, nor be considered as the heart), and in it that small ether. Now what exists within that small ether, that is to be sought for, that is to be understood.

2. And if they should say to him: 'Now with regard to that city of Brahman, and the palace in it, i.e. the small lotus of the heart, and the small ether within the heart, what is there within it that deserves to be sought for, or that is to be understood?'

3. Then he should say: 'As large as this ether (all space) is, so large is that ether within the heart. Both heaven and earth are contained within it, both fire and air, both sun and moon, both lightning and stars; and whatever there is of him (the Self) here in the world, and whatever is not (i.e. whatever has been or will be), all that is contained within it.'

4. And if they should say to him: 'If everything that exists is contained in that city of Brahman, all beings and all desires (whatever can be imagined or desired), then what is left of it, when old age reaches it and scatters it, or when it falls to pieces?'

5. Then he should say: 'By the old age of the body, that (the ether, or Brahman within it) does not age; by the death of the body, that (the ether, or Brahman within it) is not killed. That (the Brahan effect, seems to ordinary minds like a thing which is not. Therefore while the true philosopher, after acquiring the knowledge of the Highest Sat, becomes identified with it suddenly, like lightning, the ordinary mortal must reach it by slow degrees, and as a preparation for that higher knowledge which is to follow, the eighth Prapâvâhaka, particularly the first portion of it, has been added to the teaching contained in the earlier books.

1 The ether in the heart is really a name of Brahman. He is there, and therefore all that comes of him when he assumes bodily shapes, both what is and what is not, i.e. what is no longer or not yet; for the absolute nothing is not intended here.
man) is the true Brahma-city (not the body\(^1\)). In it all desires are contained. It is the Self, free from sin, free from old age, from death and grief, from hunger and thirst, which desires nothing but what it ought to desire, and imagines nothing but what it ought to imagine. Now as here on earth people follow as they are commanded, and depend on the object which they are attached to, be it a country or a piece of land,

6. 'And as here on earth, whatever has been acquired by exertion, perishes, so perishes whatever is acquired for the next world by sacrifices and other good actions performed on earth. Those who depart from hence without having discovered the Self and those true desires, for them there is no freedom in all the worlds. But those who depart from hence, after having discovered the Self and those true desires \(^2\), for them there is freedom in all the worlds.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. 'Thus he who desires the world\(^3\) of the fathers, by his mere will the fathers come to receive him, and having obtained the world of the fathers, he is happy.

2. 'And he who desires the world of the mothers, by his mere will the mothers come to receive him,

---

\(^1\) I translate this somewhat differently from the commentator, though the argument remains the same.

\(^2\) True desires are those which we ought to desire, and the fulfilment of which depends on ourselves, supposing that we have acquired the knowledge which enables us to fulfil them.

\(^3\) World is the nearest approach to loka: it means life with the fathers, or enjoying the company of the fathers.
and having obtained the world of the mothers, he is happy.

3. 'And he who desires the world of the brothers, by his mere will the brothers come to receive him, and having obtained the world of the brothers, he is happy.

4. 'And he who desires the world of the sisters, by his mere will the sisters come to receive him, and having obtained the world of the sisters, he is happy.

5. 'And he who desires the world of the friends, by his mere will the friends come to receive him, and having obtained the world of the friends, he is happy.

6. 'And he who desires the world of perfumes and garlands (gandhamālya), by his mere will perfumes and garlands come to him, and having obtained the world of perfumes and garlands, he is happy.

7. 'And he who desires the world of food and drink, by his mere will food and drink come to him, and having obtained the world of food and drink, he is happy.

8. 'And he who desires the world of song and music, by his mere will song and music come to him, and having obtained the world of song and music, he is happy.

9. 'And he who desires the world of women, by his mere will women come to receive him, and having obtained the world of women, he is happy.

'Whatever object he is attached to, whatever object he desires, by his mere will it comes to him, and having obtained it, he is happy.
THIRD KHANDA.

1. 'These true desires, however, are hidden by what is false; though the desires be true, they have a covering which is false. Thus, whoever belonging to us has departed this life, him we cannot gain back, so that we should see him with our eyes.

2. 'Those who belong to us, whether living or departed, and whatever else there is which we wish for and do not obtain, all that we find there (if we descend into our heart, where Brahman dwells, in the ether of the heart). There are all our true desires, but hidden by what is false. As people who do not know the country, walk again and again over a gold treasure that has been hidden somewhere in the earth and do not discover it, thus do all these creatures day after day go into the Brahma-world (they are merged in Brahman, while asleep), and yet do not discover it, because they are carried away by untruth (they do not come to themselves, i.e. they do not discover the true Self in Brahman, dwelling in the heart).

3. 'That Self abides in the heart. And this is the etymological explanation. The heart is called hṛiḍ-ayam, instead of hṛidy-ayam, i.e. He who is in the heart. He who knows this, that He is in the heart, goes day by day (when in sushupti, deep sleep) into heaven (svarga), i.e. into the Brahman of the heart.

4. 'Now that serene being which, after having

1 All the desires mentioned before are fulfilled, if we find their fulfilment in our Self, in the city of Brahman within our heart. There we always can possess those whom we have loved, only we must not wish to see them with our eyes; that would be a false covering to a true desire.

risen from out this earthly body, and having reached the highest light (self-knowledge), appears in its true form, that is the Self, thus he spoke (when asked by his pupils). This is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman. And of that Brahman the name is the True, Satyam,

5. This name Sattyam consists of three syllables, sat-ti-yam¹. Sat signifies the immortal, t, the mortal, and with yam he binds both. Because he binds both, the immortal and the mortal, therefore it is yam. He who knows this goes day by day into heaven (svarga).

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. That Self is a bank², a boundary, so that these worlds may not be confounded. Day and night do not pass that bank, nor old age, death, and grief; neither good nor evil deeds. All evil-doers turn back from it, for the world of Brahman is free from all evil.

2. Therefore he who has crossed that bank, if blind, ceases to be blind; if wounded, ceases to be wounded; if afflicted, ceases to be afflicted. Therefore when that bank has been crossed, night becomes day indeed, for the world of Brahman is lighted up once for all³.

3. And that world of Brahman belongs to those

¹ We ought probably to read Sattyam, and then Sat-ti-yam. The i in ti would then be the dual of an anubandha i. Instead of yaddhi, I conjecture yatti. See Ait. Āranyaka II, 5, 5.
² Setu, generally translated by bridge, was originally a bank of earth (mridādimaya), thrown up to serve as a pathway (pons) through water or a swamp. Such banks exist still in many places, and they serve at the same time as boundaries (maryādā) between fields belonging to different properties. Cf. Mait. Up. VII, 7; only who find it by abstinence—for them there is freedom in all the worlds.

Fifth Khanda.

1. What people call sacrifice (yagña), that is really abstinence (brahmaâkarya). For he who knows, obtains that (world of Brahman, which others obtain by sacrifice), by means of abstinence. What people call sacrifice (ishâ), that is really abstinence, for by abstinence, having searched (ish-tvâ), he obtains the Self.

2. What people call sacrifice (sattrâyana), that is really abstinence, for by abstinence he obtains from the Sat (the true), the safety (trâna) of the Self. What people call the vow of silence (mauna), that is really abstinence, for he who by abstinence has found out the Self, meditates (manute).

3. What people call fasting (anâsakâyana), that is really abstinence, for that Self does not perish (na nasyati), which we find out by abstinence. What people call a hermit’s life (aranyâyana), that is really abstinence. Ara ¹ and Nyâ are two lakes in the world of Brahman, in the third heaven from hence; and there is the lake Airammadiya, and the Aṣvattha tree, showering down Soma, and the city of Brahman (Hiranyagarbha) Aparâgitâ ², and the golden Prabhuvimita (the hall built by Prabhu, Brahman).

Now that world of Brahman belongs to those who find the lakes Ara and Nyâ in the world of Brahman by means of abstinence; for them there is freedom in all the worlds ³.

1 In the Kaush. Br. Up. I, 3, the lake is called Âra, at least according to the commentator.
2 In the Kaush. Br. Up. Aparâgitâ is not pâh, but âyatanam.
3 The fifth khanda is chiefly meant to recommend brahmaâkarya or abstinence from all worldly enjoyments, enjoined on the brahmaśarīrin, the student, as a means of obtaining a knowledge of Brahman. But instead of showing that such abstinence is indispensable for a proper concentration of our intellectual faculties, we are told that abstinence is the same as certain sacrifices; and this is shown, not by arguments, but by a number of very far-fetched plays on words. These it is impossible to render in any translation, nay, they hardly deserve being translated. Thus abstinence is said to be identical with sacrifice, yajña, because yo gñātā, 'he who knows,' has a certain similarity with yajña. Ishā, another kind of sacrifice, is compared with eshaṇa, search; sattra-yana with Sat, the True, the Brahman, and trāyana, protection; mauna, silence, with manana, meditating (which may be right); anāsakāyana, fasting, with nas, to perish, and aranyāgana, a hermit's life, with arā, nya, and ayana, going to the two lakes Ara and Nya, which are believed to exist in the legendary world of Brahman. Nothing can be more absurd. Having once struck the note of Brahmanic legends, such as we find it, for instance, in the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad, the author goes on. Besides the lakes Ara and Nya (in the Kaushitaki-brāhmaṇa-upanishad we have only one lake, called Āra), he mentions the Airammadīya lake, and explains it as aria (irā annam, tanmaya airo manḍas, tena pūrṇam airon) and madīya, delightful. The Aṣvattha tree, which pours down Soma, is not tortured into anything else, except that Soma is explained as the immortal, or nectar. Aparāgīta becomes the city of Brahman, because it can be conquered by no one except those who have practised abstinence. And the hall which elsewhere is called Vibhu-pramita becomes Prabhuvimitam, or Prabhuvinirmita, made by Prabhu, i.e. Brahman. All the fulfilled desires, as enumerated in khandaśas 2–5, whether the finding again of our fathers and mothers, or entering the Brahmaloka with its lakes and palaces, must be taken, not as material (sthūla), but as mental only (mānasa). On that account, however, they are by no means considered as false or unreal, as little as dreams are. Dreams are false and unreal, relatively only, i.e. relatively to what we see, when we awake, but not in themselves. Whatever we see in waking, also, has been shown to be substance, and so is the sun brown, white, blue, yellow, and red.

2. As a very long highway goes to two places, to one at the beginning, and to another at the end, so do the rays of the sun go to both worlds, to this one and to the other. They start from the sun, and enter into those arteries; they start from those arteries, and enter into the sun.

3. And when a man is asleep, reposing, and at perfect rest, so that he sees no dream, then he has entered into those arteries. Then no evil touches him, for he has obtained the light (of the sun).

4. And when a man falls ill, then those who sit round him, say, 'Do you know me? Do you know me?' As long as he has not departed from this body, he knows them.

5. But when he departs from this body, then he departs upwards by those very rays (towards the worlds which he has gained by merit, not by knowledge); or he goes out while meditating on Om (and thus securing an entrance into the Brahma-false; because it consists of forms and names only; yet these forms and names have a true element in them, viz. the Sat. Before we know that Sat, all the objects we see in waking seem true; as dreams seem true in dreaming. But when once we awake from our waking by true knowledge, we see that nothing is true but the Sat. When we imagine we see a serpent, and then discover that it is a rope, the serpent disappears as false, but what was true in it, the rope, remains true.

1 S vapna in Sanskrit is both somnus and somnium. Hence one might translate also, 'so that he is not aware that he is asleep,' which in some respects would seem even more appropriate in our passage; cf. VIII, 11, 1.

2 According to the explanation given of the Om in the Upani-shads, and more particularly in the Dahara-vidyâ contained in this Prapâthaka.
loka). And while his mind is failing, he is going to the sun. For the sun is the door of the world (of Brahman). Those who know, walk in; those who do not know, are shut out. There is this verse 1: 'There are a hundred and one arteries of the heart; one of them penetrates the crown of the head; moving upwards by it a man reaches the immortal; the others serve for departing in different directions, yea, in different directions 2.'

S E V E N T H  K H A N D A 3.

1. Pragâpati said: 'The Self which is free from sin, free from old age, from death and grief, from hunger and thirst, which desires nothing but what it ought to desire, and imagines nothing but what it ought to imagine, that it is which we must search out, that it is which we must try to understand. He who has searched out that Self and understands it, obtains all worlds and all desires.'

2. The Devas (gods) and Asuras (demons) both heard these words, and said: 'Well, let us search for that Self by which, if one has searched it out, all worlds and all desires are obtained.'

Thus saying Indra went from the Devas, Virokâna from the Asuras, and both, without having communicated with each other, approached Pragâpati,

---

1 Prasna Up. II, 1.
2 The same verse occurs in the Ka/ha 6, 16, and is frequently quoted elsewhere, for instance, Mait. comm. p. 164. For vishvaññ, the right reading would seem to be vishvak. In the Mait. Up. VI, 30, the Trish/ubh are reduced to Anush/ubh verses. See also Prasna Up. III, 6-7; Mund. Up. II, 2.
3 Here the highest problem is treated again, the knowledge of the true Self, which leads beyond the world of Brahmâ (masc.), and enables the individual self to return into the Highest Self.
holding fuel in their hands, as is the custom for pupils approaching their master.

3. They dwelt there as pupils for thirty-two years. Then Pragâpati asked them: 'For what purpose have you both dwelt here?'

They replied: 'A saying of yours is being repeated, viz. "the Self which is free from sin, free from old age, from death and grief, from hunger and thirst, which desires nothing but what it ought to desire, and imagines nothing but what it ought to imagine, that it is which we must search out, that it is which we must try to understand. He who has searched out that Self and understands it, obtains all worlds and all desires." Now we both have dwelt here because we wish for that Self.'

Pragâpati said to them: 'The person that is seen in the eye, that is the Self. This is what I have said. This is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman.'

They asked: 'Sir, he who is perceived in the water, and he who is perceived in a mirror, who is he?'

He replied: 'He himself indeed is seen in all these.'

---

1 The commentator explains this right\[. Pragâpati means by the person that is seen in the eye, the real agent of seeing, who is seen by sages only, even with their eyes shut. His pupils, however, misunderstand him. They think of the person that is seen, not of the person that sees (Yoga-sûtras II, 6). The person seen in the eye is to them the small figure imaged in the eye, and they go on therefore to ask, whether the image in the water or in a mirror is not the Self.

2 The commentators are at great pains to explain that Pragâpati told no falsehood. He meant by purusha the personal element in the highest sense, and it was not his fault that his pupils took purusha for man or body.
Eighth Khanda.

1. 'Look at your Self in a pan of water, and whatever you do not understand of your Self, come and tell me.'

They looked in the water-pan. Then Pragâpati said to them: 'What do you see?'

They said: 'We both see the self thus altogether, a picture even to the very hairs and nails.'

2. Pragâpati said to them: 'After you have adorned yourselves, have put on your best clothes and cleaned yourselves, look again into the water-pan.'

They, after having adorned themselves, having put on their best clothes and cleaned themselves, looked into the water-pan.

Pragâpati said: 'What do you see?'

3. They said: 'Just as we are, well adorned, with our best clothes and clean, thus we are both there, Sir, well adorned, with our best clothes and clean.'

Pragâpati said: 'That is the Self, this is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman.'

Then both went away satisfied in their hearts.

4. And Pragâpati, looking after them, said: 'They both go away without having perceived and without having known the Self, and whoever of these two, whether Devas or Asuras, will follow this doctrine (upanishad), will perish.'

Now Virokana, satisfied in his heart, went to the Asuras and preached that doctrine to them, that the self (the body) alone is to be worshipped, that the

---

1 I take ātmanah as a genitive, governed by yad, not as an accusative plural.

2 The commentator reads yatare for yatah.
self (the body) alone is to be served, and that he who worships the self and serves the self, gains both worlds, this and the next.

5. Therefore they call even now a man who does not give alms here, who has no faith, and offers no sacrifices, an Āsura, for this is the doctrine (upani-shad) of the Asuras. They deck out the body of the dead with perfumes, flowers, and fine raiment by way of ornament, and think they will thus conquer that world.

Ninth Khanda.

1. But Indra, before he had returned to the Devas, saw this difficulty. As this self (the shadow in the water) is well adorned, when the body is well adorned, well dressed, when the body is well dressed, well cleaned, if the body is well cleaned, that self will also be blind, if the body is blind, lame, if the body is lame, crippled, if the body is crippled, and will perish in fact as soon as the body perishes. Therefore I see no good in this (doctrine).

2. Taking fuel in his hand he came again as a pupil to Pragāpati. Pragāpati said to him: ‘Ma ghavat (Indra), as you went away with Virokana, satisfied in your heart, for what purpose did you come back?’

---

1 This evidently refers to the customs and teaching of tribes not entirely conforming to the Brahmantic system. Whether the adorning of the dead body implies burial instead of burning, seems doubtful.

2 The commentator remarks that though both Indra and Virokana had mistaken the true import of what Pragāpati said, yet while Virokana took the body to be the Self, Indra thought that the Self was the shadow of the body.

3 Srāma, lame, is explained by the commentator as one-eyed, ekanetra.
He said: 'Sir, as this self (the shadow) is well adorned, when the body is well adorned, well dressed, when the body is well dressed, well cleaned, if the body is well cleaned, that self will also be blind, if the body is blind, lame, if the body is lame, crippled, if the body is crippled, and will perish in fact as soon as the body perishes. Therefore I see no good in this (doctrine).'

3. 'So it is indeed, Maghavat,' replied Pragâpati; 'but I shall explain him (the true Self) further to you. Live with me another thirty-two years.'

He lived with him another thirty-two years, and then Pragâpati said:

Tenth Khanda.

1. 'He who moves about happy in dreams, he is the Self, this is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman.'

Then Indra went away satisfied in his heart. But before he had returned to the Devas, he saw this difficulty. Although it is true that that self is not blind, even if the body is blind, nor lame, if the body is lame, though it is true that that self is not rendered faulty by the faults of it (the body),

2. Nor struck when it (the body) is struck, nor lamed when it is lamed, yet it is as if they struck him (the self) in dreams, as if they chased him.

---

1 I have adopted the reading vikkhâyayanti, because it is the most difficult, and therefore explains most easily the various corruptions, or it may be emendations, that have crept into the text. Sâṅkara explains vikkhâdayanti by vidrâvayanti, and this shows that he too must have read vikkhâyayanti, for he could not have explained vikkhâdayanti, which means they uncover or they deprive of their clothing, by vidrâvayanti, they drive away. It is true that vikkhâyayanti may be explained in two ways; it may be the causative of khâ, to cut, but this meaning is not very appropriate here,
He becomes even conscious, as it were, of pain, and sheds tears. Therefore I see no good in this.

3. Taking fuel in his hands, he went again as a pupil to Prāpāpati. Prāpāpati said to him: 'Maghavat, as you went away satisfied in your heart, for what purpose did you come back?'

He said: 'Sir, although it is true that that self is not blind even if the body is blind, nor lame, if the body is lame, though it is true that that self is not rendered faulty by the faults of it (the body),

4. Nor struck when it (the body) is struck, nor lamed when it is lamed, yet it is as if they struck him (the self) in dreams, as if they chased him. He becomes even conscious, as it were, of pain, and sheds tears. Therefore I see no good in this.'

'So it is indeed, Maghavat,' replied Prāpāpati; 'but I shall explain him (the true Self) further to you. Live with me another thirty-two years.'

He lived with him another thirty-two years. Then Prāpāpati said:

and quite inadmissible in another passage where viṅkhkāyayati occurs, whereas, if derived from viṅkh (oṅkoµau) in a causative sense, Saṅkara could hardly have chosen a better explanation than vidrāvayanti, they make run away. The root viṅkh, viṅkhāyayati is recognised in Pāṇini III, 1, 28, and in the Dhātupāṭha 28, 129, but it has hitherto been met with in this passage only, and in Brihadāranyaka Up. IV, 3, 20. Here also the author speaks of a man who imagines that people kill him or do him violence, or that an elephant chases him or that he falls into a pit. Here we have hastiva viṅkhāyayati, and Saṅkara, at least as printed by Dr. Roer, explains this by viṅkhāpayati, viṅkhādayati, vidrāvayati; dhāvatīty arthaḥ. Much better is Dvivedaganga's commentary, as published by Dr. Weber, Satap. Brāhm. p. 1145, Kadālid enam hasti viṅkhāyayatīva vidrāvayatīva; viṅkhata gatau, guṇḍhūpavīṅkhpanipanibhyā āya iti (Pāṇ. III, 1, 28) svārtha āyapratyayaḥ. In the Dictionary of Boehtlingk and Roth the derivation from khā, to cut, is preferred; see Nachträge, s.v. hā.
Eleventh KhandA.

1. 'When a man being asleep, reposing, and at perfect rest, sees no dreams, that is the Self, this is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman.'

Then Indra went away satisfied in his heart. But before he had returned to the Devas, he saw this difficulty. In truth he thus does not know himself (his self) that he is I, nor does he know anything that exists. He is gone to utter annihilation. I see no good in this.

2. Taking fuel in his hand he went again as a pupil to Pragâpati. Pragâpati said to him: 'Maghavat, as you went away satisfied in your heart, for what purpose did you come back?'

He said: 'Sir, in that way he does not know himself (his self) that he is I, nor does he know anything that exists. He is gone to utter annihilation. I see no good in this.'

3. 'So it is indeed, Maghavat,' replied Pragâpati; 'but I shall explain him (the true Self) further to you, and nothing more than this. Live here other five years.'

He lived there other five years. This made in all one hundred and one years, and therefore it is said that Indra Maghavat lived one hundred and one years as a pupil with Pragâpati. Pragâpati said to him:

Twelfth KhandA.

1. 'Maghavat, this body is mortal and always held by death. It is the abode of that Self which is

1 See Kh. Up. VIII, 6, 3.

2 Sañkara explains this as meaning the real Self, not anything different from the Self.
immortal and without body. When in the body (by thinking this body is I and I am this body) the Self is held by pleasure and pain. So long as he is in the body, he cannot get free from pleasure and pain. But when he is free of the body (when he knows himself different from the body), then neither pleasure nor pain touches him.

2. `The wind is without body, the cloud, lightning, and thunder are without body (without hands, feet, &c.) Now as these, arising from this heavenly ether (space), appear in their own form, as soon as they have approached the highest light.

3. `Thus does that serene being, arising from this body, appear in its own form, as soon as it has approached the highest light (the knowledge of Self). He (in that state) is the highest person (uttama púrusha). He moves about there laughing (or eating), playing, and rejoicing (in his mind), be it with women, carriages, or relatives, never minding that body into which he was born.

---

1 According to some, the body is the result of the Self, the elements of the body, fire, water, and earth springing from the Self, and the Self afterwards entering them.

2 Ordinary, worldly pleasure. Comm.

3 The simile is not so striking as most of those old similes are. The wind is compared with the Self, on account of its being for a time lost in the ether (space), as the Self is in the body, and then rising again out of the ether and assuming its own form as wind. The chief stress is laid on the highest light, which in the one case is the sun of summer, in the other the light of knowledge.

4 These are pleasures which seem hardly compatible with the state of perfect peace which the Self is supposed to have attained. The passage may be interpolated, or put in on purpose to show that the Self enjoys such pleasures as an inward spectator only, without identifying himself with either pleasure or pain. He sees them, as he says afterwards, with his divine eye.
'Like as a horse attached to a cart, so is the spirit (prana, pragñatman) attached to this body.

4. 'Now where the sight has entered into the void (the open space, the black pupil of the eye), there is the person of the eye, the eye itself is the instrument of seeing. He who knows, let me smell this, he is the Self, the nose is the instrument of smelling. He who knows, let me say this, he is the Self, the tongue is the instrument of saying. He who knows, let me hear this, he is the Self, the ear is the instrument of hearing.

5. 'He who knows, let me think this, he is the Self, the mind is his divine eye. He, the Self, seeing these pleasures (which to others are hidden like a buried treasure of gold) through his divine eye, i.e. the mind, rejoices.

'The Devas who are in the world of Brahman meditate on that Self (as taught by Pragâpati to Indra, and by Indra to the Devas). Therefore all worlds belong to them, and all desires. He who knows that Self and understands it, obtains all worlds and all desires.' Thus said Pragâpati, yea, thus said Pragâpati.

ceives in all things his Self only, nothing else. In his commentary on the Taittirîya Upanishad (p. 45) Sañkara refers this passage to Brahman as an effect, not to Brahman as a cause.

1 The spirit, the conscious self, is not identical with the body, but only joined to it, like a horse, or driving it, like a charioteer. In other passages the senses are the horses; buddhi, reason, the charioteer; manas, mind, the reins. The spirit is attached to the cart by the ketana; cf. Anandagñânanagiri.

2 Because it perceives not only what is present, but also what is past and future.
THIRTEENTH KHANDA

1. From the dark (the Brahman of the heart) I come to the nebulous (the world of Brahman), from the nebulous to the dark, shaking off all evil, as a horse shakes his hairs, and as the moon frees herself from the mouth of Râhu. Having shaken off the body, I obtain, self made and satisfied, the uncreated world of Brahman, yea, I obtain it.

FOURTEENTH KHANDA

1. He who is called ether (âkāsa) is the revealer of all forms and names. That within which these forms and names are contained is the Brahman, the Immortal, the Self.

I come to the hall of Prâgâpati, to the house; I am the glorious among Brâhmans, glorious among princes, glorious among men. I obtained that glory, I am glorious among the glorious. May I never go to the white, toothless, yet devouring, white abode; may I never go to it.

---

1 This chapter is supposed to contain a hymn of triumph.
2 Râhu, in later times a monster, supposed to swallow the sun and moon at every solar or lunar eclipse. At first we only hear of the mouth or head of Râhu. In later times a body was assigned to him, but it had to be destroyed again by Vishnu, so that nothing remained of him but his head. Râhu seems derived from rah, to separate, to remove. From it raksh, to wish or strive to remove, to keep off, to protect, and in a different application râkshas, a tearing away, violence, rakshâs, a robber, an evil spirit.
3 Âkāsa, ether or space, is a name of Brahman, because, like ether, Brahman has no body and is infinitely small.
4 Here the three classes, commonly called castes, are clearly marked by the names of brâhmaṇa, râgan, and vis.
5 Yonisabdham pragananendriyam.
Fifteenth Khanda.

1. Brahmā (Hiranyagarbha or Paramesvara) told this to Pragâpati (Kasyapa), Pragâpati to Manu (his son), Manu to mankind. He who has learnt the Veda from a family of teachers, according to the sacred rule, in the leisure time left from the duties to be performed for the Guru, who, after receiving his discharge, has settled in his own house, keeping up the memory of what he has learnt by repeating it regularly in some sacred spot, who has begotten virtuous sons, and concentrated all his senses on the Self, never giving pain to any creature, except at the tirthas¹ (sacrifices, &c.), he who behaves thus all his life, reaches the world of Brahman, and does not return, yea, he does not return.

¹ The commentator says that even travelling about as a mendicant causes pain, but that a mendicant is allowed to importune people for alms at tirthas, or sacred places. Others explain this differently.
TALAVAKÂRA-UPANISHAD.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. The Pupil asks: 'At whose wish does the mind sent forth proceed on its errand? At whose command does the first breath go forth? At whose wish do we utter this speech? What god directs the eye, or the ear?'

2. The Teacher replies: 'It is the ear of the ear, the mind of the mind, the speech of speech, the breath of breath, and the eye of the eye. When freed (from the senses) the wise, on departing from this world, become immortal

3. 'The eye does not go thither, nor speech, nor mind. We do not know, we do not understand, how any one can teach it.

4. 'It is different from the known, it is also above the unknown, thus we have heard from those of old, who taught us this

5. 'That which is not expressed by speech and

---

1 This verse admits of various translations, and still more various explanations. Instead of taking vâkam, like all the other words, as a nominative, we might take them all as accusatives, governed by atimuṣya, and sa u prâṇasya prâṇah as a parenthetical sentence. What is meant by the ear of the ear is very fully explained by the commentator, but the simplest acceptance would seem to take it as an answer to the preceding questions, so that the ear of the ear should be taken for him who directs the ear, i.e. the Self, or Brahman. This will become clearer as we proceed.

2 Cf. Îsa Up. 11; 13.
by which speech is expressed, that alone know as Brahman, not that which people here adore.

6. 'That which does not think by mind, and by which, they say, mind is thought\(^1\), that alone know as Brahman, not that which people here adore.

7. 'That which does not see by the eye, and by which one sees (the work of) the eyes, that alone know as Brahman, not that which people here adore.

8. 'That which does not hear by the ear, and by which the ear is heard, that alone know as Brahman, not that which people here adore.

9. 'That which does not breathe by breath, and by which breath is drawn, that alone know as Brahman, not that which people here adore.'

SECOND KHANDA.

1. The Teacher says: 'If thou thinkest I know it well, then thou knowest surely but little, what is that form of Brahman known, it may be, to thee?'

2. The Pupil says: 'I do not think I know it well, nor do I know that I do not know it. He

---

\(^1\) The varia lectio manaso matam (supported also by the commentary) is metrically and grammatically easier, but it may be, for that very reason, an emendation.

\(^2\) In order to obtain a verse, we must leave out the words tvam yad asya deveshv atha nu mîmânsyam eva. They were probably inserted, as an excuse for the third khanda treating of the relation of Brahman to the Devas. There is considerable variety in the text, as handed down in the Sâma-veda and in the Atharva-veda, which shows that it has been tampered with. Daharam for dabhram may be the older reading, as synizesis occurs again and again in the Upanishads.
among us who knows this, he knows it, nor does he know that he does not know it.

3. 'He by whom it (Brahman) is not thought, by him it is thought; he by whom it is thought, knows it not. It is not understood by those who understand it, it is understood by those who do not understand it.

4. 'It is thought to be known (as if) by awakening, and (then) we obtain immortality indeed. By the Self we obtain strength, by knowledge we obtain immortality.

5. 'If a man know this here, that is the true (end of life); if he does not know this here, then there is great destruction (new births). The wise who have thought on all things (and recognised the Self in them) become immortal, when they have departed from this world.'

Third Khanda.

1. Brahman obtained the victory for the Devas. The Devas became elated by the victory of Brah-

---

1 This verse has again been variously explained. I think the train of thought is this: We cannot know Brahman, as we know other objects, by referring them to a class and pointing out their differences. But, on the other hand, we do not know that we know him not, i.e. no one can assert that we know him not, for we want Brahman in order to know anything. He, therefore, who knows this double peculiarity of the knowledge of Brahman, he knows Brahman, as much as it can be known; and he does not know, nor can anybody prove it to him, that he does not know Brahman.

2 This khanda is generally represented as a later addition, but its prose style has more of a Brähmava character than the verses in the preceding khandas, although their metrical structure is irregular, and may be taken as a sign of antiquity.
1. man, and they thought, this victory is ours only, this greatness is ours only.

2. Brahman perceived this and appeared to them. But they did not know it, and said: ‘What sprite (yaksha or yakshya) is this?’

3. They said to Agni (fire): ‘O Gâtavedas, find out what sprite this is.’ ‘Yes,’ he said.

4. He ran toward it, and Brahman said to him: ‘Who are you?’ He replied: ‘I am Agni, I am Gâtavedas.’

5. Brahman said: ‘What power is in you?’ Agni replied: ‘I could burn all whatever there is on earth.’

6. Brahman put a straw before him, saying: ‘Burn this.’ He went towards it with all his might, but he could not burn it. Then he returned thence and said: ‘I could not find out what sprite this is.’

7. Then they said to Vâyu (air): ‘O Vâyu, find out what sprite this is.’ ‘Yes,’ he said.

8. He ran toward it, and Brahman said to him: ‘Who are you?’ He replied: ‘I am Vâyu, I am Mâtarisvan.’

9. Brahman said: ‘What power is in you?’ Vâyu replied: ‘I could take up all whatever there is on earth.’

10. Brahman put a straw before him, saying: ‘Take it up.’ He went towards it with all his might, but he could not take it up. Then he returned thence and said: ‘I could not find out what sprite this is.’

11. Then they said to Indra: ‘O Maghavan, find out what sprite this is.’ He went towards it, but it disappeared from before him.

12. Then in the same space (ether) he came towards a woman, highly adorned: it was Umâ, the daughter of Himavat. He said to her: 'Who is that sprite?'

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. She replied: 'It is Brahman. It is through the victory of Brahman that you have thus become great.' After that he knew that it was Brahman.

2. Therefore these Devas, viz. Agni, Vâyu, and Indra, are, as it were, above the other gods, for they touched it (the Brahman) nearest.

3. And therefore Indra is, as it were, above the other gods, for he touched it nearest, he first knew it.

4. This is the teaching of Brahman, with regard to the gods (mythological): It is that which now

---

1 Umâ may here be taken as the wife of Siva, daughter of Himavat, better known by her earlier name, Pârvatî, the daughter of the mountains. Originally she was, not the daughter of the mountains or of the Himâlaya, but the daughter of the cloud, just as Rudra was originally, not the lord of the mountains, girîsa, but the lord of the clouds. We are, however, moving here in a secondary period of Indian thought, in which we see, as among Semitic nations, the manifested powers, and particularly the knowledge and wisdom of the gods, represented by their wives. Umâ means originally flax, from vâ, to weave, and the same word may have been an old name of wife, she who weaves (cf. duhitri, spinster, and possibly wife itself, if O. H. G. wib is connected with O. H. G. wëban). It is used almost synonymously with ambikâ, Taitt. Âr. p. 839. If we wished to take liberties, we might translate umâ haimavatî by an old woman coming from the Himavat mountains; but I decline all responsibility for such an interpretation.

2 The next phrase was borrowed from § 3, without even changing the singular to the plural. As Indra only found out that it was Brahman, the original distinction between Indra and the other gods, who only came near to it, was quite justified. Still it might be better to adopt the var. lect. sa hy etat in § 2.
flashes forth in the lightning, and now vanishes again.

5. And this is the teaching of Brahman, with regard to the body (psychological): It is that which seems to move as mind, and by it imagination remembers again and again.¹

6. That Brahman is called Tadvana ², by the name of Tadvana it is to be meditated on. All beings have a desire for him who knows this.

7. The Teacher: ‘As you have asked me’ to tell you the Upanishad, the Upanishad has now

¹ I have translated these paragraphs very differently from Sāṅkara and other interpreters. The wording is extremely brief, and we can only guess the original intention of the Upanishad by a reference to other passages. Now the first teaching of Brahman, by means of a comparison with the gods or heavenly things in general, seems to be that Brahman is what shines forth suddenly like lightning. Sometimes the relation between the phenomenal world and Brahman is illustrated by the relation between bubbles and the sea, or lightning and the unseen heavenly light (Mait. Up. VI, 35). In another passage, Kh. Up. VIII, 12, 2, lightning, when no longer seen, is to facilitate the conception of the reality of things, as distinct from their perceptibility. I think, therefore, that the first simile, taken from the phenomenal world, was meant to show that Brahman is that which appears for a moment in the lightning, and then vanishes from our sight.

The next illustration is purely psychological. Brahman is proved to exist, because our mind moves towards things, because there is something in us which moves and perceives, and because there is something in us which holds our perceptions together (saṅkalpa), and revives them again by memory.

I give my translation as hypothetical only, for certainty is extremely difficult to attain, when we have to deal with these enigmatical sayings which, when they were first delivered, were necessarily accompanied by oral explanations.

² Tadvana, as a name of Brahman, is explained by ‘the desire of it,’ and derived from van, to desire, the same as vānkh.
been told you. We have told you the Brâhmi Upanishad.

8. ‘The feet on which that Upanishad stands are penance, restraint, sacrifice; the Vedas are all its limbs, the True is its abode.

9. ‘He who knows this Upanishad, and has shaken off all evil, stands in the endless, unconquerable world of heaven, yea, in the world of heaven.’

1 It is impossible to adopt Saṅkara’s first rendering, ‘the Vedas and all the Aṅgas,’ i.e. the six subsidiary doctrines. He sees himself that sarvâṅgâni stands in opposition to pratiśhâ and āyatana, but seeing Veda and Aṅga together, no Brahman could help thinking of the Vedâṅgas.

First Adhyāya.

First Khanda.

1. Now follows the Mahāvrata ceremony.
2. After having killed Vṛitra, Indra became great. When he became great, then there was the Mahāvrata (the great work). This is why the Mahāvrata ceremony is called Mahāvrata.
3. Some people say: 'Let the priest make two (recitations with the offering of the) āgya (ghee) on that day,' but the right thing is one¹.
4. He who desires prosperity should use the hymn, pra vo devāyāgnaye (Rv. III, 13, 1).
5. He who desires increase should use the hymn, viso viso atithim (Rv. VIII, 74, 1).

¹ That it should be one only is proved from the types, i.e. from other sacrifices, that have to be followed in the performance of the Mahāvrata. The first type is the Agnishṭoma, where one sastra is enjoined as āgyasastra, viz. pra vo devāyāgnaye. In the Visvagit, which has to follow the Agnishṭoma, another hymn is put in its place, viz. agnim naro didhitibhiḥ. In the Mahāvrata, which has to follow the Visvagit, some people recommend the use of both these hymns. But that is wrong, for there must be in the sacrifices which follow the Agnishṭoma twelve sastras altogether; and if there were two here, instead of one, we should get a total of thirteen.
6. The people (visa/i) indeed are increase\(^1\), and therefore he (the sacrificer) becomes increased.

7. But (some say), there is the word atithim (in that hymn, which means a guest or stranger, asking for food). Let him not therefore take that hymn. Verily, the atithi (stranger) is able\(^2\) to go begging.

8. 'No,' he said, 'let him take that hymn.

9. 'For he who follows the good road and obtains distinction, he is an atithi (guest)\(^3\).

10. 'They do not consider him who is not so, worthy to be (called) an atithi (guest).

11. 'Therefore let him by all means take that hymn.'

12. If he takes that hymn, let him place the (second) tristich, āghanma vr\(i\)trahantamam, 'we came near to the victorious,' first.

13. For people worship the whole year (performing the Gavāmayana sacrifice) wishing for this day (the last but one)—they do come near.

14. The (next following) three tristichs begin with an Anush\(\text{/}\)ubh\(^4\). Now Brahman is Gāyatri, speech is Anush\(\text{/}\)ubh. He thus joins speech with Brahman.

15. He who desires glory should use the hymn, abodhy agni\(h\) samidhā ganânām (Rv. V, 1, 1).

---

\(^1\) The word visa/i, which occurs in the hymn, means people. The commentator says that because the Vaisyas or tradespeople increase their capital, therefore they are called increase.

\(^2\) Able, or liable; cf. Ait. Âr. II, 3, 5, 7.

\(^3\) Atithi is here explained by yo bhavati, and bhavati is explained as walking on the good road. One expects yo vā atati. The obtaining of distinction is probably derived from ati, above, in atithi.

\(^4\) In the first and second the Anush\(\text{/}\)ubh is followed by two Gāyatrīs.
16. He who desires offspring and cattle should use the hymn, hotâganishṭa ketanah (Rv. II, 5, 1).

SECOND KHANDA.

1. He who desires proper food¹ should use the hymn, agnim naro didhitibhiḥ (Rv. VII, 1, 1).²

2. Verily, Agni (fire) is the eater of food.

In the other (recitations accompanying the) offerings of âgya (where Agni is likewise mentioned) the worshippers come more slowly near to Agni (because the name of Agni does not stand at the beginning of the hymn). But here a worshipper obtains proper food at once, he strikes down evil at once.

3. Through the words (occurring in the second foot of the first verse), hasta/yuti ganayanta, ‘they caused the birth of Agni by moving their arms,’ the hymn becomes endowed with (the word) birth. Verily, the sacrificer is born from this day of the sacrifice, and therefore the hymn is endowed with (the word) birth.

4. There are four metrical feet (in the Trishubh verses of this hymn). Verily, cattle have four feet, therefore they serve for the gaining of cattle.

5. There are three metrical feet (in the Virâg verses of this hymn). Verily, three are these three-

¹ Annâdyam is always explained as food, here as annam tad âdyam ka. It must be so translated here and elsewhere (I, 2, 10), though it is often an abstract of annâda, an eater of food, a healthy man.

² This hymn is prescribed in the Visvagit sacrifice, and taken over to the Mahâvrata, according to rule. It is used, however, both as obligatory and as optional at the same time, i.e. it is an essential part of the sacrifice, and at the same time to be used by those who wish for proper food.
fold worlds. Therefore they serve for the conquest of the worlds.

6. These (the Trish\u00b2ubh and Virå g verses of the hymn) form two metres, which form a support (pratish\u00b2hå). Verily, man is supported by two (feet), cattle by four feet. Therefore this hymn places the sacrificer who stands on two feet among cattle which stand on four.

7. By saying them straight on there are twenty-five verses in this hymn. Man also consists of twenty-five. There are ten fingers on his hands, ten toes on his feet, two legs, two arms, and the trunk (âtman) the twenty-fifth. He adorns that trunk, the twenty-fifth, by this hymn.

8. And then this day (of the sacrifice) consists of twenty-five, and the Stoma hymn of that day consists of twenty-five\(^1\) (verses) ; it becomes the same through the same. Therefore these two, the day and the hymn, are twenty-five\(^2\).

9. These twenty-five verses, by repeating the first thrice and the last thrice, become thirty less one. This is a Virå g verse (consisting of thirty syllables), too small by one. Into the small (heart) the vital spirits are placed, into the small stomach food is placed\(^3\), therefore this Virå g, small by one, serves for the obtainment of those desires.

10. He who knows this, obtains those desires.

11. The verses (contained in the hymn agnim naro didhitibhi\u00b2) become the Brihå ti\(^4\) metre and

\(^1\) Cf. Ait. Âr. I, 1, 4, 21 ; II, 3, 4, 2.
\(^2\) The plural after the dual is explained by the fact that the hymn means the twenty-five verses.
\(^3\) Cf. I, 3, 7, 5.
\(^4\) The hymn consists of eighteen Virå
g and seven Trish\u00b2ubh
the Virāg metre, (they become) the perfection which belongs to that day (the mahāivrata). Then they also become Anushūbhs, for the offerings of āgya (ghee) dwell in Anushūbhs.

Third Khandā.

1. Some say: 'Let him take a Gāyatris hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, Gāyatris is brightness and glory of countenance, and thus the sacrificer becomes bright and glorious.'

2. Others say: 'Let him take a Ushinih hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, Ushinih is life, and thus the sacrificer has a long life.'

Others say: 'Let him take an Anushūbhs hymn verses. Therefore the eighteen Virāg verses remain what they are, only that the first is repeated three times, so that we have twenty Virāg verses. The seven Trishūbhs, by repeating the last three times, become nine. We then take eight syllables away from each verse, thus changing them into nine Brhatī verses. The nine times eight syllables, which were taken off, give us seventy-two syllables, and as each Brhatī consists of thirty-six syllables, two Brhatīs.

1 The change of the first verse, which is a Virāg of thirty-three syllables, into an Anushūbhs is produced by a still easier process. The first Virāg consists here of thirty-three syllables, the Anushūbhs should have thirty-two. But one or two syllables more or less does not destroy a metre, according to the views of native metricians. The Virāg itself, for instance, should have thirty syllables, and here has thirty-three. Therefore if changed into an Anushūbhs, it simply has one syllable over, which is of no consequence. Comm.

2 Cf. Ait. Âr. I, 1, 1, 4.

3 Thus far the hymn which has to be recited by the Hotri priest, after the eating of the ritugrahas, has been considered. What follows next is the so-called Pra-uga hymn, consisting of seven trikas, which the Hotri has to recite after the Visvedevagraha. Different Sākhās recommend hymns of different metres, our Sākhā fixes on the Gāyatris.

[3]
for the Pra-uga. Verily, Anuśṭūbh is valour, and it serves for obtaining valour.

Others say: 'Let him take a Brīhatī hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, Brīhatī is fortune, and thus the sacrificer becomes fortunate.'

Others say: 'Let him take a Paṅkti hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, Paṅkti is food, and thus the sacrificer becomes rich in food.'

Others say: 'Let him take a Trīṣṭūbhb hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, Trīṣṭūbhb is strength, and thus the sacrificer becomes strong.'

Others say: 'Let him take a Gagatī hymn for the Pra-uga. Verily, cattle is Gagatī-like, and thus the sacrificer becomes rich in cattle.'

3. But we say: 'Let him take a Gāyatīri hymn only. Verily, Gāyatīri is Brahman, and that day (the mahāvrata) is (for the attainment of) Brahman. Thus he obtains Brahman by means of Brahman.

4. 'And it must be a Gāyatīri hymn by Madhu-kkhandas,

5. 'For Madhu-kkhandas is called Madhu-kkhandas, because he wishes (khandati) for honey (madhu) for the Rishis.

6. 'Now food verily is honey, all is honey, all desires are honey, and thus if he recites the hymn of Madhu-kkhandas, it serves for the attainment of all desires.

7. 'He who knows this, obtains all desires.'

This (Gāyatīri pra-uga), according to the one-day (ekāha) ceremonial¹, is perfect in form². On that day (the mahāvrata) much is done now and then which has to be hidden\(^1\), and has to be atoned for (by recitation of hymns). Atonement (sānti) is rest, the one-day sacrifice. Therefore at the end of the year (on the last day but one of the sacrifice that lasts a whole year) the sacrificers rest on this atonement as their rest.

¹ It is copied from the Visvagīt, and that from the Agnishoma.
² Nothing is wanting for its performance, if one only follows the rules given in the Agnishoma.

8. He who knows this rests firm, and they also for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

FOURTH KHANDA\(^2\).

1. Rv. I, 2, 1-3. Vāyav ā yāhi darsateme somā aram kritāḥ, 'Approach, O Vāyu, conspicuous, these Somas have been made ready.' Because the word ready occurs in these verses, therefore is this day (of the sacrifice) ready (and auspicious) for the sacrificer and for the gods.

2. Yes, this day is ready (and auspicious) to him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

3. Rv. I, 2, 4-6. Indravāyu ime sūtā, ā yātam upa nishkrītam, 'Indra and Vāyu, these Somas are prepared, come hither towards what has been prepared.' By nishkrīta, prepared, he means what has been well prepared (samskrīta).

4. Indra and Vāyu go to what has been prepared by him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

---

\(^1\) Dāśīnṛīya-bahubhūtamaithuna-brahmakāripumśkalīsampравā-dādikam. See Rajendralal Mitra, Introduction to his edition of the Aitareya-āranyaka, p. 25. It might be better to join ekāhāḥ with sāntyām, but even then the argumentation is not quite clear.

\(^2\) Next follows a list of the verses which form the seven trīkas (groups of three verses) of the Pra-uga hymn, with occasional remarks on certain words.
5. Rv. I, 2, 7. Mitram huve pùtadaksham, dhiyam ghritâhîm sâdhantâ, ‘I call Mitra of holy strength; (he and Varuna) they fulfil the prayer accompanied with clarified butter.’ Verily, speech is the prayer accompanied with clarified butter.

6. Speech is given to him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

7. Rv. I, 3, 1. Asvinâ yagvarî ishah, ‘O Asvinâu, (eat) the sacrificial offerings.’ Verily, the sacrificial offerings are food, and this serves for the acquirement of food.

9. The Asvinâu go to the sacrifice of him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

10. Rv. I, 3, 4-6. Indrâ yâhi lîtrabhâno, indrâ yâhi dhiyeshitah, indrâ yâhi tûtugâna, ‘Come hither, Indra, of bright splendour, Come hither, Indra, called by prayer, Come hither, Indra, quickly!’ Thus he recites, Come hither, come hither!

11. Indra comes to the sacrifice of him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

12. Rv. I, 3, 7. Omâsas karshavidhrito visve devâsa á gata, ‘Visve Devas, protectors, supporters of men, come hither!’

13. Verily, the Visve Devas come to the call of him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

14. Rv. I, 3, 7. Dâsvâmso dâsushah sutam, ‘Come ye givers to the libation of the giver!’ By dâsushah he means dadushah, i.e. to the libation of every one that gives.
15. The gods fulfil his wish, with whatever wish he recites this verse.

16. (The wish of him) who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

17. Rv. I, 3, 10. Pāvakā nah sarasvatī yañam vasytu dhiyāvasuk, ‘May the holy Sarasvatī accept our sacrifice, rich in prayer!’ Speech is meant by ‘rich in prayer.’

18. Speech is given to him who knows this, or for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites.

19. And when he says, ‘May she accept our sacrifice!’ what he means is, ‘May she carry off our sacrifice!’

20. If these verses are recited straight on, they are twenty-one. Man also consists of twenty-one. There are ten fingers on his hands, ten toes on his feet, and the trunk the twenty-first. He adorns that trunk, the twenty-first, by this hymn.

21. By repeating the first and the last verses thrice, they become twenty-five. The trunk is the twenty-fifth, and Pragâpati is the twenty-fifth. There are ten fingers on his hands, ten toes on his feet, two legs, two arms, and the trunk the twenty-fifth. He adorns that trunk, the twenty-fifth, by this hymn.

Now this day consists of twenty-five, and the Stoma hymn of that day consists of twenty-five: it becomes the same through the same. Therefore these two, the day and the hymn, are twenty-five, yea, twenty-five.

1 Cf. I, 1, 2, 7; I, 3, 5, 7.
SECOND ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. The two trikas, Rv. VIII, 68, 1–3, á tvā ratham yathotaye, and Rv. VIII, 2, 1–3, idam vaso sutam andhaḥ, form the first (pratipad) and the second (anuśara) of the Marutvatiya hymn.

2. Both, as belonging to the one-day ceremonial, are perfect in form. On that day much is done now and then which has to be hidden, and has to be atoned for. Atonement is rest, the one-day sacrifice. Therefore at the end of the year the sacrificers rest on this atonement as their rest. He who knows this rests firm, and they also for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

3. In the second verse of (the Pragātha), indra nediya ed ihi, pra sū tirā saśibhir ye ta ukthinaḥ (Rv. VIII, 53, 5, 6), there occurs the word ukthinaḥ, reciters of hymns. Verily, this day (the mahāvrata) is an uktha (hymn), and as endowed with an uktha, the form of this day is perfect.

4. In the first verse (of another Pragātha) the word vira, strong, occurs (Rv. I, 40, 3), and as endowed with the word vira, strong, the form of this day is perfect.

---

1 In the first adhyāya the two hymns to be recited by the Hotri priest at the morning-libation (the āgya and pra-uga sastra) have been considered. Now follows the Marutvatiya hymn, to be recited by the Hotri priest at the noon-libation.

2 Taken from the Agnishoma.

3 Cf. I, 1, 3, 7–8.

4 All these Pragathas consist of two verses expanded into a trika.

5 Hotrādaya ukthiṁ sastrīṁ.
5. In the second verse (of another Pragâtha) the word suviryam, strength, occurs (Rv. I, 40, 1), and as endowed with the word suvîrya, strength, the form of this day is perfect.

6. In the first verse (of another Pragâtha) the word ukthiyam, to be hymned, occurs (Rv. I, 40, 5). Verily, this day is an uktha, and as endowed with an uktha, the form of this day is perfect.

7. In the (Dhayyyâ) verse agnir neta (Rv. III, 20, 4) the word vrîtrahâ, killer of Vrîtra, occurs. The killing of Vrîtra is a form (character) of Indra, this day (the mahâvrata) belongs to Indra, and this is the (perfect) form of that day.

8. In the (Dhayyyâ) verse tvam soma kratubhiḥ sukratur bhûḥ (Rv. I, 91, 2) the word vrîshâ¹, powerful, occurs. Powerful is a form (character) of Indra, this day belongs to Indra, and this is the (perfect) form of that day.

9. In the (Dhayyyâ) verse pinvanty apah (Rv. I, 64, 6) the word vâginam, endowed with food, occurs. Endowed with food is a form (character) of Indra, this day belongs to Indra, and this is the (perfect) form of that day.

10. In the same verse the word stanayantam, thundering, occurs. Endowed with thundering is a form (character) of Indra, this day belongs to Indra, and this is the (perfect) form of that day.

11. In (the Pragâtha) pra va indrâya brhi̊hate (Rv. VIII, 89, 3) (the word brhi̊hat occurs). Verily, brhi̊hat is mahat (great), and as endowed with mahat, great, the form of this day (mahâvrata) is perfect.

12. In (the Pragâtha) brîhad indrâya gâyata (Rv.

¹ Cf. I, 2, 2, 14.
VIII, 89, 1) (the word br̥hat occurs). Verily, br̥hat is mahat (great), and as endowed with mahat, the form of this day is perfect.

13. In (the Pragâtha) nakiḥ sudâso ratham pary āsa na rîramad (Rv. VII, 32, 10) the words paryâsa (he moved round) and na rîramad (he did not enjoy) occur, and as endowed with the words paryasta and rânti the form of this day is perfect.

He recites all (these) Pragâthas, in order to obtain all the days (of the sacrifice), all the Ukthas 2, all the Prîshîthas 3, all the Sastras 4, all the Pra-ugas 5, and all the Savanas (libations).

SECOND KHANDA 6.

1. He recites the hymn, asat su me garitaḥ sâbhi-vegalḥ (Rv. X, 27, 1), (and in it the word) satya-dhvritam, the destroyer of truth. Verily, that day

---

1 Because the performance of the Mahâvrata sacrifice moves the worshipper round to another world and gives him enjoyment.

Comm. It is difficult to surpass the absurdity of these explanations. Na rîramat means no one stopped the chariot of Sudâs. But even if it meant that no one rejoiced through the chariot of Sudâs, it would be difficult to see how the negative of enjoyment, mentioned in the hymn, could contribute to the perfection of a sacrifice which is to confer positive enjoyment on the worshipper.

2 The stotras following after the Yagnâyagnîya Sâman, serving for the ukthya-kratus.

3 The stotras of the noon-libation, to be performed with the Rathantara, Br̥hat, and other Sâmans.

4 The sastras, recitations, accompanying the oblations of Ågya.

5 The pra-ugas, a division of sastras, described above.

6 The type after which the Marutvatiya-sastra is to be performed is the Katurvimsa day. Hitherto (from â tvâ ratham to nakiḥ sudâsaḥ), all that is taken over from the type to the modification, i.e. the Marutvatiya, has been explained. Now follow the verses which are new and peculiar to the Marutvatiya of the Mahâvrata.
is truth, and as endowed with the word satya, truth, the form of this day is perfect\(^1\).

2. That hymn is composed by Vasukra. Verily, Vasukra is Brahman, and that day is Brahman. Thus he obtains Brahman by means of Brahman\(^2\).

3. Here they say: ‘Why then is that Marutvatiya hymn completed by the hymn of Vasukra?’ Surely because no other Rishi but Vasukra brought out a Marutvatiya hymn, or divided it properly\(^3\). Therefore that Marutvatiya hymn is completed by the hymn of Vasukra.

4. That hymn, asat su me, is not definitely addressed to any deity, and is therefore supposed to be addressed to Pragâpati. Verily, Pragâpati is indefinite, and therefore the hymn serves to win Pragâpati.

5. Once in the hymn (Rv. X, 27, 22) he defines Indra (indraya sunvat); therefore it does not fall off from its form, as connected with Indra.

6. He recites the hymn (Rv. VI, 17, 1) pibâ somam abhi yam ugra tardah.

7. In the verse ārvam gavyam mahi grīnâna indra the word mahi, great, occurs. Endowed with the word mahat, the form of this day is perfect.

8. That hymn is composed by Bharadvâga, and Bharadvâga was he who knew most, who lived longest, and performed the greatest austerities among the Rishis, and by this hymn he drove away evil. Therefore if he recites the hymn of Bharadvâga,

---

\(^1\) The commentator endeavours to make the meaning more natural by taking in the word prahantâ, he who kills the destroyer of truth. But considering the general character of these remarks, this is hardly necessary.

\(^2\) Cf. I, 1, 3, 3.

\(^3\) By separating the first trika from the second, and so forth.
then, after having driven away evil, he becomes learned, long-lived, and full of austerities.

9. He recites the hymn kāyā subhā savayasaḥ sanilāḥ (Rv. I, 165, 1).

10. In the verse ā sāsate prati haryanty ukthā (Rv. I, 165, 4) the word ukthā occurs. Verily, that day (the mahāvrata) is ukthā (hymn). Endowed with the word ukthā, the form of this day becomes perfect.

11. That hymn is called Kayāsubhīya. Verily, that hymn, which is called Kayāsubhīya, is mutual understanding and it is lasting. By means of it Indra, Agastya, and the Maruts came to a mutual understanding. Therefore, if he recites the Kayāsubhipiy hymn, it serves for mutual understanding.

12. The same hymn is also long life. Therefore, if the sacrificer is dear to the Hotri, let him recite the Kayāsubhīya hymn for him.

13. He recites the hymn marutvān indra vrīshabo ranāya (Rv. III, 47, 1).

14. In it the words indra vrīshabha (powerful) occur. Verily, powerful is a form of Indra, this day belongs to Indra, and this is the perfect form of that day.

15. That hymn is composed by Viśvāmitra. Verily, Viśvāmitra was the friend (mitra) of all (visva).

16. Everybody is the friend of him who knows this, and for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

17. The next hymn, ganishthā ugrak sahase turāya (Rv. I, 73, 1), forms a Nividdhāna, and,

---

2 Cf. Ait. Âr. II, 2, 1, 8.
3 The hymn consists of eleven verses. In the middle, after the sixth verse, nivids or invitations, such as indro marutvān, are inserted, and therefore it is called a nividdhāna hymn.
according to the one-day (ekāha) ceremonial, is perfect in form. On that day much is done now and then which has to be hidden, and has to be atoned for (by recitation of hymns). Atonement is rest, the one-day sacrifice. Therefore at the end of the year (on the last day but one of the sacrifice that lasts a whole year) the sacrificers rest on this atonement as their rest.

He who knows this rests firm, and they also for whom a Hotṛī priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

18. These, if recited straight on, are ninety-seven verses. The ninety are three Virāg, each consisting of thirty, and then the seven verses which are over. Whatever is the praise of the seven, is the praise of ninety also.

1 With this hymn the Marutvatiya-sastra is finished. All the hymns from ā tvā ratham to asat su me garitā are simply taken over from the Katurvimaṇa ceremonial, the rest are peculiar to the Mahāvratā day, the day preceding the Udayanīya or final day of the Gavāmayana sattra. All this is more fully described in the fifth Āranyaka (V, 1, 1, 8) containing the Sūtras or rules of Saunaka, while the earlier Āranyakas are reckoned as Brāhmanas, and are therefore mixed up with matters not actually required for the performance of the sacrifice.

2 The first Stotriya and Ānurūpa
\[ \text{tri} \text{kās} = 6 \ (I, 2, 1, 1). \]
The six Pragāthas, each of 2 verses raised to 3 (but the text gives seven Pragāthas) = . . . \[ 18 \ (I, 2, 1, 3; 4; 5; 6; 11; 12; 13). \]
Three Dhāyās = . . . \[ 3 \ (I, 2, 1, 7; 8; 9). \]
Asat su = . . . \[ 24 \ (I, 2, 2, 1). \]
Pibā somam = . . . \[ 15 \ (I, 2, 2, 6). \]
Kayā subḥā = . . . \[ 15 \ (I, 2, 2, 9). \]
Marutvān indra = . . . \[ 5 \ (I, 2, 2, 13). \]
Ganishṭā ugrah = . . . \[ 11 \ (I, 2, 2, 17). \]
19. By repeating the first and last verses three times each, they become one hundred and one verses.

20. There are five fingers, of four joints each, two pits (in the elbow and the arm), the arm, the eye, the shoulder-blade; this makes twenty-five. The other three parts have likewise twenty-five each. That makes a hundred, and the trunk is the one hundred and first.

21. Hundred is life, health, strength, brightness. The sacrificer as the one hundred and first rests in life, health, strength, and brightness.

22. These verses become Trishûbh, for the noonday-libation consists of Trishûbh verses.

Third Khanda.

1. They say: ‘What is the meaning of preṅkha, swing?’ Verily, he is the swing, who blows (the wind). He indeed goes forward (pra+ṅkhate) in these worlds, and that is why the swing is called preṅkha.

2. Some say, that there should be one plank, because the wind blows in one way, and it should be like the wind.

3. That is not to be regarded.

4. Some say, there should be three planks, because there are these three threefold worlds, and it should be like them.

---

1 The left side as well as the right, and then the left and right side of the lower body. Thus we have twenty joints of the five toes, a thigh, a leg, and three joints, making twenty-five on each side.

2 Approach the Trishûbh metre of the last hymn. Comm.

3 After having considered the Marutvatīya, he proceeds to consider the Nishkevalya. This has to be recited by the Hotrī while sitting on a swing.
5. That is not to be regarded.

6. Let there be two, for these two worlds (the earth and heaven) are seen as if most real, while the ether (space) between the two is the sky (antariksha). Therefore let there be two planks.

7. Let them be made of Udumbara wood. Verily, the Udumbara tree is sap and eatable food, and thus it serves to obtain sap and eatable food.

8. Let them be elevated in the middle (between the earth and the cross-beam). Food, if placed in the middle, delights man, and thus he places the sacrificer in the middle of eatable food.

9. There are two kinds of rope, twisted towards the right and twisted towards the left. The right ropes serve for some animals, the left ropes for others. If there are both kinds of rope, they serve for the attainment of both kinds of cattle.

10. Let them be made of Darbha (Kusa grass), for among plants Darbha is free from evil, therefore they should be made of Darbha grass.

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. Some say: 'Let the swing be one ell (aratni) above the ground, for by that measure verily the Svarga worlds are measured.' That is not to be regarded.

2. Others say: 'Let it be one span (prādesa), for by that measure verily the vital airs were measured.' That is not to be regarded.

3. Let it be one fist (mushṭi), for by that measure verily all eatable food is made, and by that measure

1 They rise one span above the heart, and they proceed one span from out the mouth. Comm.
all eatable food is taken; therefore let it be one fist above the ground.

4. They say: ‘Let him mount the swing from east to west, like he who shines; for the sun mounts these worlds from east to west.’ That is not to be regarded.

5. Others say: ‘Let him mount the swing sideways, for people mount a horse sideways\(^1\), thinking that thus they will obtain all desires.’ That is not to be regarded.

6. They say: ‘Let him mount the swing\(^2\) from behind, for people mount a ship from behind, and this swing is a ship in which to go to heaven.’ Therefore let him mount it from behind.

7. Let him touch the swing with his chin (\(khu-\)buka). The parrot (\(suka\)) thus mounts a tree, and he is of all birds the one who eats most food. Therefore let him touch it with his chin.

8. Let him mount the swing with his arms\(^3\). The hawk swoops thus on birds and on trees, and he is of all birds the strongest. Therefore let him mount with his arms.

9. Let him not withdraw one foot (the right or left) from the earth, for fear that he may lose his hold.

10. The Hotrī mounts the swing, the Udgātrī the seat made of Udumbara wood. The swing is masculine, the seat feminine, and they form a union. Thus he makes a union at the beginning of the uktha in order to get offspring.

---

\(^1\) Here we have clearly riding on horseback.

\(^2\) While the swing points to the east, let him stand west, and thus mount.

\(^3\) The fore-arms, from the elbow to the end, the aratnī. Comm.
11. He who knows this, gets offspring and cattle.

12. Next the swing is food, the seat fortune. Thus he mounts and obtains food and fortune.

13. The Hotrakas (the Prasāstri, Brāhmaṇākkhamsin, Potri, Neshtri, Agnidhra, and Akkhavāka) together with the Brahman sit down on cushions made of grass, reeds, leaves, &c.

14. Plants and trees, after they have grown up, bear fruit. Thus if the priests mount on that day altogether (on their seats), they mount on solid and fluid as their proper food. Therefore this serves for the attainment of solid as proper food¹.

15. Some say: 'Let him descend after saying vasha².' That is not to be regarded. For, verily, that respect is not shown which is shown to one who does not see it³.

16. Others say: 'Let him descend after he has taken the food in his hand.' That is not to be regarded. For, verily, that respect is not shown which is shown to one after he has approached quite close.

17. Let him descend after he has seen the food. For, verily, that is real respect which is shown to one when he sees it. Only after having actually ¹ One expects ishaḥ before ursaḥ, but it is wanting in both text and commentary, and in other MSS. also.

² The word by which the Hotri invites the Adhvaryu to offer the oblation to the gods. The descending from the swing belongs, of course, to a later part of the sacrifice.

³ It is supposed that the Hotri rises from the swing to show respect to the sacrificial food, when it is brought near. But as it is not brought near, immediately after the Hotri has finished his part with the word vashaḥ, the food could not see the Hotri rise, and this mark of respect, intended for the food, would thus be lost.
seen the food (that is brought to the sacrifice), let him descend from the swing.

18. Let him descend turning towards the east, for in the east the seed of the gods springs up. Therefore let him rise turning towards the east, yea, turning towards the east.

THIRD ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Let him begin this day with singing ‘Him,’ thus they say.

2. Verily, the sound Him is Brahman, that day also is Brahman. He who knows this, obtains Brahman even by Brahman.

3. As he begins with the sound Him, surely that masculine sound of Him and the feminine Rik (the verse) make a couple. Thus he makes a couple at the beginning of the hymn in order to get offspring. He who knows this, gets cattle and offspring.

4. Or, as he begins with the sound Him, surely like a wooden spade, so the sound Him serves to dig up Brahman (the sap of the Veda). And as a man wishes to dig up any, even the hardest soil, with a spade, thus he digs up Brahman.

5. He who knows this digs up, by means of the sound Him, everything he may desire.

6. If he begins with the sound Him, that sound is the holding apart of divine and human speech.

1 Should it be devaretasamprāgāyate, or devaretasamprāgāyate?
2 The Nishkevalya-sastra, of the noon-libation; cf. I, 2, 1.
3 Cf. I, 2, 4, 10.
Therefore, he who begins, after having uttered the sound Him, holds apart divine and human speech ¹.

Second Khanda.

1. And here they ask: 'What is the beginning of this day?' Let him say: 'Mind and speech ².'
2. All desires dwell in the one (mind), the other yields all desires.
3. All desires dwell in the mind, for with the mind he conceives all desires.
4. All desires come to him who knows this.
5. Speech yields all desires, for with speech he declares all his desires.
6. Speech yields all desires to him who knows this.
7. Here they say: 'Let him not begin this day with a Rik, a Yagus, or a Sàman verse (divine speech), for it is said, he should not start with a Rik, a Yagus, or a Sàman ³.'
8. Therefore, let him say these Vyâhritis (sacred interjections) first.
9. These interjections Bhûs, Bhuvas, Svar are the three Vedas, Bhûs the Rig-veda, Bhuvas the Yagur-veda, Svar the Sàma-veda. Therefore (by

¹ Human speech is the ordinary speech, divine speech that of the Veda. Thus between the hymns, or the divine speech, and the ordinary language of conversation the sound Him is interposed as a barrier.
² Mind, to think about the hymns which have to be recited; speech, to recite them without a flaw.
³ It is doubtful whether neyād rikā and apagakkhet can have this meaning. However, what is intended is clear, viz. that the priest, even after having uttered the sound Him, should not immediately begin with verses from the Vedas, but should intercalate the three syllables bhûr bhuvah svar, or, if taken singly, bhûs, bhuvas, svar.
intercalating these) he does not begin simply with a Rik, Yagus, or Sâman verse, he does not start with a Rik, Yâgus, or Sâman verse.

Third Khanda.

1. He begins with tad, this, (the first word of the first hymn, tad id âsa). Verily 'this, this' is food, and thus he obtains food.

2. Pragâpati indeed uttered this as the first word, consisting of one or two syllables, viz. tata and tâta (or tat)\(^1\). And thus does a child, as soon as he begins to speak, utter the word, consisting of one or two syllables, viz. tata and tâta (or tat). With this very word, consisting of tat or tatta, he begins.

3. This has been said by a Rishi (Rv. X, 71, 1)\(^2\):

4. 'O Brâhaspati, the first point of speech;'—for this is the first and highest point of speech.

5. 'That which you have uttered, making it a name;'—for names are made by speech.

---

\(^1\) Tata and tâta are used both by children in addressing their parents, and by parents in addressing their children. If tat is called the very same word, eva is used in the sense of iva.

\(^2\) The verse is cited to confirm the meaning of tat, the first word of the first hymn (tad id âsa) as explained before. It was said that tat was the first name applied to a child. Now, according to Āryâyana Grhyasûtra I, 16, 8, a name is given to a child at the time of its birth, a name which no one knows except father and mother, till the time when he is initiated by a Guru. This is called the abhivadaniya name. In allusion to this custom it is said here that tata is the secret name of the child, which becomes publicly known at a later time only. Of course the interpretation of the verse in that sense is unnatural, but quite in keeping with the general character of the Āranyaka. I doubt whether even the commentator understood what was intended by the author, and whether the gods who enter the body are supposed to know the name, or whether the name refers to these gods, or, it may be, to tad, the Brahman.
6. 'That (name) which was the best and without a flaw;'-for this is the best and without a flaw.

7. 'That which was hidden by their love, is made manifest;'—for this was hidden in the body, viz. those deities (which enter the body, Agni as voice, entering the mouth, &c.); and that was manifest among the gods in heaven. This is what was intended by the verse.

Fourth Khandā

1. He begins with: 'That indeed was the oldest in the worlds;'-for that (the Brahman) is verily the oldest in the worlds.

2. 'Whence was born the fierce one, endowed with brilliant force;'—for from it was born the fierce one, who is endowed with brilliant force.

3. 'When born he at once destroys the enemies;'—for he at once when born struck down the evil one.

4. 'He after whom all friends rejoice;'—verily all friends are the creatures, and they rejoice after him, saying, 'He has risen, he has risen'.

5. 'Growing by strength, the almighty;'-for he (the sun) does grow by strength, the almighty.

6. 'He, as enemy, causes fear to the slave;'-for everything is afraid of him.

7. 'Taking the breathing and the not-breathing;'—this means the living and the lifeless.

8. 'Whatever has been offered at feasts came to thee;'-this means everything is in thy power.

9. 'All turn their thought also on thee;'-this

---

1 He now explains the first hymn of the Nishkevalya, which is called the Rāgana.
2 Rv. X, 120, 1.
3 The sun and the fire.
4 Rv. X, 120, 2.
5 Rv. X, 120, 3.
means all these beings, all minds, all thoughts also turn to thee.

10. 'When these two become three protectors;'—i.e. when these two united beget offspring.

11. He who knows this, gets offspring and cattle.

12. 'Join what is sweeter than sweet (offspring) with the sweet (the parents);'—for the couple (father and mother) is sweet, the offspring is sweet, and he thus joins the offspring with the couple.

13. 'And this (the son, when married) being very sweet, conquered through the sweet;'—i.e. the couple is sweet, the offspring is sweet, and thus through the couple he conquers offspring.

14. This is declared by a Rishi: 'Because he (Pragâpati) raised his body (the hymn tad id âsa or the Veda in general) in the body (of the sacrificer)' (therefore that Nishkevalya hymn is praised);—i.e. this body, consisting of the Veda, in that corporeal form (of the sacrificer).

15. 'Then let this body indeed be the medicine of that body;'—i.e. this body, consisting of the Veda, of that corporeal form (of the sacrificer).

16. Of this (the first foot of Rv. X, 120, 1) the eight syllables are Gâyatri, the eleven syllables are Trish/ubh, the twelve syllables are Gagati, the ten syllables are Virâg. The Virâg, consisting of ten syllables, rests in these three metres.

17. The word purusha, consisting of three syllables, that indeed goes into the Virâg.

---

1 All these are purely fanciful interpretations.
2 Not to be found in our Sâkhâ of the Rig-veda.
3 These metres are obtained by a purely arbitrary counting of syllables in the hymn tadidâsa, which really consists of Trish/ubh verses.
4 If we simply count syllables, the first and second feet of the 18. Verily, these are all metres, these (Gāyatri, Trishūbh, Gagatī) having theVirāg as the fourth. In this manner this day is complete in all metres to him who knows this.

FIFTH KHANDA.

1. He extends these (verses) by (interpolating) the sound\(^1\). Verily, the sound is purusha, man. Therefore every man when he speaks, sounds loud, as it were.

2. At the end of each foot of the first verse of the hymn tad id āsa, he inserts one foot of the second verse of hymn Rv. VIII, 69, nadam va odatinām, &c. Thus the verse is to be recited as follows:

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{Tad id āsa bhuvaneshu} & \ yes\text{t}h\text{am pu} \\
\text{nadam va odatinām,} & \\
\text{Yato gā\text{ṇ}a ugras tveshanrivmno} & \ yu \\
\text{ru nadam yoyuvatinām,} & \\
\text{Sadyo gā\text{ṇ}āno ni rīnāti satrūn} & \ \\
\text{patim vo aghnyānām,} & \\
\text{Anu yam visve madanti ūmāh} & \ \\
\text{sho dhenunām ishudhyasi.} & \\ \end{align*}
\]

first verse consist of ten syllables only, the fourth of nine or ten. In order to bring them to the right number, the word purusha is to be added to what is a Virāg, i.e. to the first, the second, and fourth feet. We thus get:

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{tad id āsa bhuvaneshu} & \ yes\text{t}h\text{am pu} \\
\text{yato gā\text{ṇ}a ugras tveshanrivmno} & \ yu \\
\text{sadyo gā\text{ṇ}āno ni rīnāti satrūn} & \ \\
\text{anu yam visve madanti ūmāh} & \  \\ \end{align*}
\]

Cf. Ait. Âr. V, 1, 6.

\(^1\) The sound, nada, is really a verse beginning with nadam, and which is interpolated after the syllables pu ru shāh.
In nadam va odatīnām (Rv. VIII, 69, 2), odatī are the waters in heaven, for they water all this; and they are the waters in the mouth, for they water all good food.

3. In nadam yoyuvatīnām (Rv. VIII, 69, 2), yoyuvatī are the waters in the sky, for they seem to inundate; and they are the waters of perspiration, for they seem to run continually.

4. In patīm vo aghnyānām (Rv. VIII, 69, 2), aghnyā are the waters which spring from the smoke of fire, and they are the waters which spring from the organ.

5. In dhenūnām ishudhyasi (Rv. VIII, 69, 2), the dhenu (cows) are the waters, for they delight all this; and ishudhyasi means, thou art food.

6. He extends a Trishūbh and an Anushūbh. Trishūbh is the man, Anushūbh the wife, and they make a couple. Therefore does a man, after having found a wife, consider himself a more perfect man.

7. These verses, by repeating the first three times, become twenty-five. The trunk is the twenty-fifth, and Pragāpati is the twenty-fifth. There are ten fingers on his hands, ten toes on his feet, two legs, two arms, and the trunk the twenty-fifth. He adorns that trunk as the twenty-fifth. Now this day consists of twenty-five, and the Stoma hymn of that day consists of twenty-five: it becomes the same through the same. Therefore the two, the day and the hymn, are twenty-five

Sixth Khanda.

This is an exact repetition of the third khanda. According to the commentator, the third khanda was intended for the glory of the first word tad, while the sixth is intended for the glory of the whole hymn.

Seventh Khanda.

1. He begins with the hymn, Tad id āsa bhuva-neshu gyeshtham (Rv. X, 120). Verily, gyesththa, the oldest, is mahat, great. Endowed with mahat the form of this day is perfect.

2. Then follows the hymn, Tām su te kirtim maghavan mahitvā (Rv. X, 54), with the auspicious word mahitvā.

3. Then follows the hymn, Bhūya id vavridhe viryāya (Rv. VI, 30), with the auspicious word virya.

4. Then follows the hymn, Nrīnām u tvā nrita-tamam gobhir ukthaiḥ (Rv. I, 51, 4), with the auspicious word uktha.

5. He extends the first two pādas, which are too small, by one syllable (Rv. X, 120, 1a, and Rv. VIII, 69, 2a)². Into the small heart the vital spirits are placed, into the small stomach food is placed. It

1 The number is obtained as follows:

1. Tad id āsa (Rv. X, 120) = 9 verses
2. Tām su te kirtim (Rv. X, 54) = 6 ”
3. Bhūya id vavridhe (Rv. VI, 30) = 5 ”
4. Nrīnām u tvā (Rv. I, 51, 4) = 3 ”

23 + 2 = 25

² Cf. I, 1, 2, 9.
serves for the attainment of these desires. He who knows this, obtains these desires.

6. The two feet, each consisting of ten syllables (Rv, X, 120, 1 a, b), serve for the gaining of both kinds of food, of what has feet (animal food), and what has no feet (vegetable food).

7. They come to be of eighteen syllables each. Of those which are ten, nine are the prānas (openings of the body), the tenth is the (vital) self. This is the perfection of the (vital) self. Eight syllables remain in each. He who knows them, obtains whatever he desires.

EIGHTH KHANDas.

1. He extends (these verses) by (interpolating) the sound. Verily, breath (prāna) is sound. Therefore every breath when it sounds, sounds loud, as it were.

2. The verse (VIII, 69, 2) nadaṃ va odatīnām, &c., is by its syllables an Ushnuḥ, by its feet an Anushubh. Ushnuḥ is life, Anushubh, speech. He thus places life and speech in him (the sacrificer).

3. By repeating the first verse three times, they

1 Because Viraṅg, a foot of ten syllables, is food.
2 Rv. X, 120, 1 a= 10
   Rv. VIII, 69, 2 a= 7
   Syllable pu= 1
   \[\text{Total: } 18\]

3 Seven in the head and two in the body; sapta vai sīrshanyāḥ prāṇā dvāv avāṇāv iti.
4 Cf. I, 3, 5, 1.
5 Each páda has seven syllables, the third only six; but a seventh syllable is gained by pronouncing the y as i. Comm.
6 Because it has four pádas.
become twenty-five. The trunk is the twenty-fifth, and Pragâpati is the twenty-fifth. There are ten fingers on his hands, ten toes on his feet, two legs, two arms, and the trunk the twenty-fifth. He adorns that trunk as the twenty-fifth. Now this day consists of twenty-five, and the Stoma hymn of that day consists of twenty-five: it becomes the same through the same. Therefore the two, the day and the hymn, are twenty-five. This is the twenty-fifth with regard to the body.

4. Next, with regard to the deities: The eye, the ear, the mind, speech, and breath, these five deities (powers) have entered into that person (purusha), and that person entered into the five deities. He is wholly pervaded there with his limbs to the very hairs and nails. Therefore all beings to the very insects are born as pervaded (by the deities or senses)\(^1\).

5. This has been declared by a Rishi (Rv. X, 114, 8):—

6. 'A thousandfold are these fifteen hymns;'—for five arise from ten\(^2\).

7. 'As large as heaven and earth, so large is it;'—verily, the self (givâtman) is as large as heaven and earth.

8. 'A thousandfold are the thousand powers\(^3\);'—

---

\(^1\) The commentator takes this in a different sense, explainingatra, there, as the body pervaded by the person, yet afterwards stating that all beings are born, pervaded by the senses.

\(^2\) The commentator explains ukhâ, hymns, as members or organs. They are the five, and they spring from the ten, i.e. from the five elements (earth, water, fire, wind, and ether), forming part of the father and mother each, and therefore called ten, or a decade. Daśatâ is explained by bhūtadarsakât.

\(^3\) The application of the senses to a thousand different objects.
by saying this the poet pleases the hymns (the senses), and magnifies them.

9. 'As far as Brahman reaches, so far reaches speech;'—wherever there is Brahman, there is a word; and wherever there is a word, there is Brahman, this was intended.

10. The first of the hymns among all those hymns has nine verses. Verily, there are nine prāṇas (openings), and it serves for their benefit.

11. Then follows a hymn of six verses. Verily, the seasons are six, and it serves to obtain them.

12. Then follows a hymn of five verses. Verily, the Paṅkti consists of five feet. Verily, Paṅkti is food, and it serves for the gaining of proper food.

13. Then follows a tristich. Three are these threefold worlds, and it serves to conquer them.

14. These verses become Br̥hatis¹, that metre being immortal, leading to the world of the Devas. That body of verses is the trunk (of the bird represented by the whole sastra), and thus it is. He who knows this comes by this way (by making the verses the trunk of the bird) near to the immortal Self, yea, to the immortal Self².

¹ Each foot of the Trishṭubh has eleven syllables, to which seven are added from the Nada hymn. This gives eighteen syllables for each páda. Two pádas therefore give thirty-six syllables, and this is a Br̥hati. In this manner the twenty-three verses of the hymns yield forty-six Br̥hatis. Comm.

² He obtains a birth among the gods by means of this Mahāvrata ceremonial, if performed with meditation and a right understanding of its hidden meaning.
FOURTH ADHYÂYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Next comes the Sûdodohas verse. Sûdodohas is breath, and thereby he joins all joints with breath.

2. Next follow the neck verses. They recite them as Ushwih, according to their metre.

3. Next comes (again) the Sûdodohas verse. Sûdodohas is breath, and thereby he joins all joints with breath.

4. Next follows the head. That is in Gâyatri verses. The Gâyatri is the beginning of all metres; the head the first of all members. It is in Arkavat verses (Rv. I, 7, 1-9). Arka is Agni. They are nine verses. The head consists of nine pieces. He recites the tenth verse, and that is the skin and the hairs on the head. It serves for reciting one verse more than (the nine verses contained in) the Stoma.

---

1 The Nishkevalya-stra is represented in the shape of a bird, consisting of trunk, neck, head, vertebrae, wings, tail, and stomach. Before describing the hymns which form the neck, another hymn has to be mentioned, called Sûdodohas, which has to be recited at the end of the hymns, described before, which form the trunk. Sûdodohas is explained as 'yielding milk,' and because that word occurs in the verse, the verse is called Sûdodohas. It follows on the Nada verse, Rv. VIII, 69, 3. Cf. Ait. Âr. I, 5, 1, 7.

2 They occur in another sâkhâ, and are to be recited such as they are, without any insertions. They are given by Saunaka, Ait. Âr. V, 2, 1.

3 It was created from the mouth of Praçâpati.

4 They are called so, because the word arka occurs in them.

5 The chanters of the Sâma-veda make a Trivîṭ Stoma of this hymn, without any repetitions, leaving out the tenth verse. The reciters of the Rig-veda excel them therefore by reciting a tenth verse. This is called ati-prasannam (or -nā).
These form the Trivrit Stoma and the Gāyatrī metre, and whatever there exists, all this is produced after the production of this Stoma and this metre. Therefore the recitation of these head-hymns serves for production.

5. He who knows this, gets offspring and cattle.

6. Next comes the Sūdādohas verse. Verily, Sūdādohas is breath, and thereby he joins all joints with breath.

7. Next follow the vertebrae1 (of the bird). These verses are Virāg (shining). Therefore man says to man, ‘Thou shinest above us;’ or to a stiff and proud man, ‘Thou carriest thy neck stiff.’ Or because the (vertebrae of the neck) run close together, they are taken to be the best food. For Virāg is food, and food is strength.

8. Next comes the Sūdādohas verse. Sūdādohas is breath, and thereby he joins all joints with breath.

---

1 Vigavas may be a singular, and the commentator seems to take it as such in his first explanation. The text, tâ virāgo bhavanti, proves nothing, because it could not be sa virāgo bhavanti, nor even sa virâd bhavati. Possibly the word may occur in both forms, vigu, plural vigavah, and vigavah. In a somewhat similar way we find grivâ and grivâh, folia and la feuille. On p. 109, the commentator speaks of vigavabhāga, and again, p. 110, pakshamularûpa vigavâ abhihitâh. He, however, explains its meaning rightly, as the root of the wings, or rather the lower bones of the neck. Grivâh, plural, were originally the vertebrae of the neck. The paragraph, though very empty, contains at least some interesting forms of language. First vigu, vertebrae, then the participles duta and sambâlatama, and lastly the verb pratya, the last probably used in the sense of to bring near, to represent, with the superlative adverb annatamâm (Pān. V, 4, 11), i.e. they are represented as if they brought the best food.
SECOND KHANDA.

1. Next follows the right wing. It is this world (the earth), it is this Agni, it is speech, it is the Rathantara, it is Vasishthā, it is a hundred. These are the six powers (of the right wing). The Sampāta hymn (Rv. IV, 20) serves indeed for obtaining desires and for firmness. The Paṅkti verse (Rv. I, 80, 1) serves for proper food.

2. Next comes the Sūdadohas verse. Sūdadohas is breath, thereby he joins all joints with breath.

3. Next follows the left wing. It is that world (heaven), it is that sun, it is mind, it is the Brāhad, it

---

1 Rathantara is the name of the whole number of hymns to be recited at this part of the sacrifice. It was made by Vasishthā, and consists of one hundred verses.

2 1. Stotriya, abhi tvā śūra nonumaḥ (Rv. VII, 32, 22) 2 (3)
2. Anurūpa, abhi tvā pūrvapātaye (Rv. VIII, 3, 7) 2 (3)
3. Indrasya nu (Rv. I, 32) . . . 15
4. Tve ha (Rv. VII, 18, 1–15) . . . 15
5. Yas tigma (Rv. VII, 19) . . . 11
6. Ugro gagñe (Rv. VII, 20) . . . 10
7. Ud u (Rv. VII, 23) . . . 6
8. Å te mahaḥ (Rv. VII, 25) . . . 6
9. Na somaḥ (Rv. VII, 26) . . . 5
10. Indram narah (Rv. VII, 27) . . . 5
11. Brahma naha (Rv. VII, 28) . . . 5
12. Ayam somaḥ (Rv. VII, 29) . . . 5
13. Å na indrah (Rv. IV, 20) . . . 11

14. Ittha hi (Rv. I, 80, 1) . . . 98 (100)

These hymns and verses are given Ait. Âr. V, 2, 2, 1. Here we also learn that hymn Rv. IV, 20, is called Sampāta, and that the last verse is a Paṅkti.

3 The six powers are earth, Agni, speech, Rathantara, Vasishthā, and a hundred.
is Bharadvāga, it is a hundred¹. These are the six powers (of the left wing). The Sampâta hymn (Rv. IV, 23) serves indeed for obtaining desires and for firmness. The Paṅkti verse (Rv. I, 81, 1) serves for proper food.

4. These two (the right and the left wings) are deficient and excessive ². The Br̥ihat (the left wing) is man, the Rathantara (the right wing) is woman. The excess belongs to the man, the deficiency to the woman. Therefore they are deficient and excessive.

5. Now the left wing of a bird is verily by one feather better, therefore the left wing is larger by one verse.

¹ The hundred verses are given Ait. Âr. V, 2, 2, 5.

1. Stotriya, tvam id dhi (Rv. VI, 46, 1) . . 2 (3)
2. Anurūpa, tvam hy ehi (Rv. VIII, 61, 7) . . 2 (3)
3. Tam u shuhi (Rv. VI, 18) . . . . 15
4. Suta it tvam (Rv. VI, 23) . . . . 10
5. Vr̥śhad madah (Rv. VI, 24) . . . . 10
6. Ya ta úthiḥ (Rv. VI, 25) . . . . 9
7. Abhûr ekah (Rv. VI, 31) . . . . 5
8. Apûrvya (Rv. VI, 32) . . . . 5
9. Ya ogishihah (Rv. VI, 33) . . . . 5
10. Sam ka tve (Rv. VI, 34) . . . . 5
11. Kadā bhuvan (Rv. VI, 35) . . . . 5
12. Satrā madâsah (Rv. VI, 36) . . . . 5
13. Arvâg ratham (Rv. VI, 37) . . . . 5
14. Apâd (Rv. VI, 38) . . . . 5
15. Kathâ mahân (Rv. IV, 23) . . . . 11
16. Indro madâya (Rv. I, 81, 1) . . . . 1

\[99 (101)\]

\[100 (102)\]

Though there are said to be 100 verses before the Paṅkti (No. 16), I can get only 99 or 101. See the following note.

² The right wing is deficient by one verse, the left wing exceeds by one verse. I count 99 or 101 verses in the right, and 100 or 102 in the left wing.
6. Next comes the Sūdadohas verse. Sūdadohas is breath, and thereby he joins all joints with breath.

7. Next follows the tail. They are twenty-one Dvipadā verses\(^1\). For there are twenty-one backward feathers in a bird.

8. Then the Ekavimsa is the support of all Stomas, and the tail the support of all birds\(^2\).

9. He recites a twenty-second verse. This is made the form of two supports. Therefore all birds support themselves on their tail, and having supported themselves on their tail, they fly up. For the tail is a support.

10. He (the bird and the hymn) is supported by two decades which are Virâg. The man (the sacrificer) is supported by the two Dvipadâs, the twenty-first and twenty-second. That which forms the bird serves for the attainment of all desires; that which forms the man, serves for his happiness, glory, proper food, and honour.

11. Next comes a Sūdadohas verse, then a Dhayyâ, then a Sūdadohas verse. The Sūdadohas is a man, the Dhayyâ a woman, therefore he recites the Dhayyâ as embraced on both sides by the Sūdadohas. Therefore does the seed of both, when it is effused, obtain oneness, and this with regard to the

---

\(^1\) These verses are given Ait. Âr. V, 2, 2, 9.

\(^2\) The other Stomas of the Agnishatoma are the Trivrit, Pañkādasa, Saptadasa, the Ekavimsa being the highest. Cf. I, 5, 1, 3.
woman only. Hence birth takes place in and from the woman. Therefore he recites that Dhayyå in that place 1.

Third Khanda.

1. He recites the eighty tristichs of Gâyatrî. Verily, the eighty Gâyatrî tristichs are this world (earth). Whatever there is in this world of glory, greatness, wives, food, and honour, may I obtain it, may I win it, may it be mine.

2. Next comes the Sûdadahas verse. Sûdadahas verily is breath. He joins this world with breath.

3. He recites the eighty tristichs of Brîhâtî. Verily, the eighty Brîhâtî tristichs are the world of the sky. Whatever there is in the world of the sky of glory, greatness, wives, food, and honour, may I obtain it, may I win it, may it be mine.

4. Next comes the Sûdadahas verse. Sûdadahas verily is breath. He joins the world of the sky with breath.

5. He recites the eighty tristichs of Ushnuh. Verily, the eighty Ushnuh tristichs are that world, the heaven. Whatever there is in that world of glory, greatness, wives, food, and honour, also the divine being of the Devas (Brahman), may I obtain it, may I win it, may it be mine.

6. Next comes the Sûdadahas verse. Sûdadahas verily is the breath. He joins that world with breath, yea, with breath.

---

1 Asmin vigavabhâge. Comm.
2 These and the following verses form the food of the bird. Comm. The verses themselves are given by Saunaka in the fifth Âranyaka.
FIFTH ADHYÂYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. He recites the Vasa hymn, wishing, May everything be in my power.

2. They (its verses) are twenty-one, for twenty-one are the parts (the lungs, spleen, &c.) in the belly.

3. Then the Ekavimsa is verily the support of all Stomas, and the belly the support of all food.

4. They consist of different metres. Verily, the intestines are confused, some small, some large.

5. He recites them with the pranava, according to the metre, and according to rule. Verily, the intestines are according to rule, as it were; some shorter, some longer.

6. Next comes the Sûdadahas verse. Sûdadahas verily is breath. He joins the joints with breath.

7. After having recited that verse twelve times he

---

1 Having recited the verses which form the body, neck, head, wings, and tail of the bird, also the food intended for the bird, he now describes the Vasa hymn, i.e. the hymn composed by Vasa, Rv. VIII, 46. That hymn takes the place of the stomach, which receives the food intended for the bird. Cf. Ait. Âr. V, 2, 5. In 1, 5, 2, 4 it is called a Nivid.

2 Verses 1-20 of the Vasa hymn, and one Sûdadahas.

3 Pranâvam means 'with pranava,' i.e. inserting Om in the proper places.

4 According as the metres of the different verses are fixed by Saunaka, Ait. Âr. V, 2, 5, who says that verse 15 is Dvipadâ, and that the last four words, nûnam atha, form an Ekapadâ.

5 According to rule, i.e. so that they should come right as Ârvalâyana has prescribed the recitation of Dvipadâ and Ekapadâ verses. In a Dvipadâ there should be a stop after the first foot, and Om at the end of the second. In an Ekapadâ there should be Om at the beginning and at the end.
leaves it off there. These prânas are verily twelve-fold, seven in the head, two on the breast, three below. In these twelve places the prânas are contained, there they are perfect. Therefore he leaves it off there.

8. The hymn indrâgni yuvam su nah (Rv. VIII, 40) forms the two thighs (of the bird) belonging to Indra and Agni, the two supports with broad bones.

9. These (verses) consist of six feet, so that they may stand firm. Man stands firm on two feet, animals on four. He thus places man (the sacrificer), standing on two feet, among four-footed cattle.

10. The second verse has seven feet, and he makes it into a Gâyatrî and Anushûbh. Gâyatrî is Brahman, Anushûbh is speech; and he thus puts together speech with Brahman.

11. He recites a Trishûbh at the end. Trishûbh is strength, and thus does he come round animals by strength. Therefore animals come near where there is strength (of command, &c.); they come to be roused and to rise up, (they obey the commands of a strong shepherd.)

Second KhandA.

1. When he recites the Nishkevalya hymn addressed to Indra (Rv. X, 50), pra vo mahe, he inserts a Nivid (between the fourth and fifth verses). Thus he clearly places strength in himself (in the sastra, in the bird, in himself).

2. They are Trishûbhs and Gagatis.

---

1 He repeats the Sûdadohas verse no more. Comm.
2 Sentences like indro deva/somam pibatu.
There they say: 'Why does he insert a Nivid among mixed Trish\'ubhs and Gagatis? But surely one metre would never support the Nivid of this day, nor fill it: therefore he inserts the Nivid among mixed Trish\'ubhs and Gagatis.

Let him know that this day has three Nivids: the Vasa hymn is a Nivid, the V\=alakhilyas are a Nivid, and the Nivid itself is a Nivid. Thus let him know that day as having three Nivids.

Then follow the hymns vane na vâ (Rv. X, 29) and yo g\=ata eva (Rv. II, 12). In the fourth verse of the former hymn occur the words anne samasya yad asan man\=ish\=â\=t, and they serve for the winning of proper food.

Then comes an insertion. As many Trish\'ubh and Gagati verses, taken from the ten M\=and\=alas and addressed to Indra, as they insert (between the two above-mentioned hymns), after changing them into Br\=hat\=is, so many years do they live beyond the (usual) age (of one hundred years). By this insertion age is obtained.

After that he recites the S\=an\=aniya hymn, wishing that cattle may always come to his offspring.

Then he recites the T\=arkshya hymn. T\=arkshya is verily welfare, and the hymn leads to welfare. Thus (by reciting the hymn) he fares well.

1 According to the Prakr\=iti of the Agnish\=oma they ought to be all Trish\'ubhs. Comm.
2 These hymns occur in the eighty Br\=hat\=i tristichs.
3 From the Samh\=it\=a, which consists of ten thousand verses. Comm.
4 Rv. X, 178. T\=arksha Garuda being the deity of the hymn, it is called T\=arkshya.
9. Then he recites the Ekapadā (indro visvam vi rāgati), wishing, May I be everything at once, and may I thus finish the whole work of metres.1

10. In reciting the hymn indram visvā avivridhan (Rv. I, 11) he intertwines the first seven verses by intertwining their feet.2 There are seven prānas (openings) in the head, and he thus places seven prānas in the head. The eighth verse (half-verse) he does not intertwine.3 The eighth is speech, and he thinks, May my speech never be intertwined with the other prānas. Speech therefore, though dwelling in the same abode as the other prānas, is not intertwined with them.

11. He recites the Virāg verses. Verily, Virāg verses are food, and they thus serve for the gaining of food.

12. He ends with the hymn of Vasishṭha,4 wishing, May I be Vasishṭha!

13. But let him end with the fifth verse, esha stomo maha ugrāya váhe, which, possessing the word mahat, is auspicious.

14. In the second foot of the fifth verse the word dhuri occurs. Verily, dhuh (the place where the horse is fastened to the car) is the end (of the car). This day also is the end (of the sacrifice which lasts a whole year).5 Thus the verse is fit for the day.

---

1 The Ekapadā forms the last metre in this ceremony.
2 The first and last half-verses of the hymn are not to be intertwined. Of the remaining fourteen half-verses he joins, for instance, the fourth foot of the first verse with the second foot of the second verse, and so on. Comm.
3 Because nothing more follows. Comm.
5 Rv. VII, 24.
6 The last day is the udayaṁyiṁśirātra. Comm.
15. In the third foot the word arka is auspicious.
16. The last foot is: 'Make our glory high as heaven over heaven.' Thus wherever Brahmanic speech is uttered, there his glory will be, when he who knows this finishes with that verse. Therefore let a man who knows this, finish (the Nishkevalya) with that verse.

Third Khanda

1. Tat savitur vринимаhe (Rv. V, 82, 1-3) and adья no deva savitar (Rv. V, 82, 4-6) are the beginning (pratipad) and the next step (ануkara) of the Vaisvadeva hymn, taken from the Ekāha ceremonial and therefore proper.

2. On that day much is done now and then which has to be hidden, and has to be atoned for. Atonement is rest, the one-day sacrifice. Therefore at the end of the year the sacrificers rest on this atonement as their rest. He who knows this rests firm, and they also for whom a Hotrī priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

3. Then (follows) the hymn addressed to Savitri, tad devasya savitur vâryam mahat (Rv. IV, 53). Verily, mahat, great, (in this foot) is the end. This day too is the end. Thus the verse is fit for the day.

---

1 After finishing the Nishkevalya of the noon-libation, he explains the vaisvadevasastra of the third libation.
2 The norm of the Mahâvrata is the Visvagit, and the norm of that, the Agnishôma Ekâha. The verses to be used for the Vaisvadeva hymn are prescribed in those normal sacrifices, and are here adopted.
3 Cf. Ait. Âr. I, 2, 1, 2.
4 Nothing higher than the great can be wished for or obtained. Comm.
4. The hymn katarā pūrvā katarā parāyoḥ (Rv. I, 185), addressed to Dyāvaprithivi, is one in which many verses have the same ending. Verily, this day also (the mahāvrata) is one in which many receive the same reward. Thus it is fit for the day.

5. The hymn anasvo gāto anabhisur ukthyaḥ (Rv. IV, 36) is addressed to the Ribhus.

6. In the first verse the word tri (kakrāḥ) occurs, and trivat is verily the end. This day also is the end (of the sacrifice). Thus the verse is fit for the day.

7. The hymn asya vāmasya palitasya hotuḥ (Rv. I, 164), addressed to the Visvedevas, is multiform. This day also is multiform. Thus the verse is fit for the day.

8. He recites the end of it, beginning with gaurir mimāya (Rv. I, 164, 41).

9. The hymn á no bhadrāḥ kratavo yantu visvataḥ (Rv. I, 89), addressed to the Visvedevas, forms the Nividdhâna, taken from the Ekâha ceremonial, and therefore proper.

10. On that day much is done now and then which has to be hidden, and has to be atoned for. Atonement is rest, the one-day sacrifice. Therefore at the end of the year the sacrificers rest on this atonement as their rest. He who knows this rests firm, and they also for whom a Hotri priest who knows this, recites this hymn.

11. The hymn vaisvānarāya dhishanām Rita-

---

1 All who perform the ceremony obtain Brahman. Cf. § 12.

2 The third wheel, in addition to the usual two wheels, forms the end of a carriage, as before the dhuh, cf. I, 5, 2, 14. This day also is the end.

3 Consisting of Vedic hymns and dances, &c. Comm.
vridhe (Rv. III, 2) forms the beginning of the Āgnimāruta. Dhishanâ, thought, is verily the end, this day also is the end. Thus it is fit for the day.

12. The hymn prayagyavo maruto bhrāgadvish'ayaḥ (Rv. V, 55), addressed to the Maruts, is one in which many verses have the same ending. Verily, this day also is one in which many receive the same reward. Thus it is fit for the day.

13. He recites the verse gātavedase sunavāma somam (Rv. I, 99, 1), addressed to Gātavedas, before the (next following) hymn. That verse addressed to Gātavedas is verily welfare, and leads to welfare. Thus (by reciting it) he fares well.

14. The hymn imam stomam arhate gātavedase (Rv. I, 94), addressed to Gātavedas, is one in which many verses have the same ending. Verily, this day also (the mahâvrata) is one in which many receive the same reward. Thus it is fit for the day, yea, it is fit for the day.

1 Cf. § 4.
2 Cf. I, 5, 2, 8.
SECOND ĀRAVYAKA.

FIRST ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

With the second Āranyaka the Upanishad begins. It comprises the second and third Āranyakas, and may be said to consist of three divisions, or three Upanishads. Their general title is Bahvrika- upanishad, sometimes Mahaitareya-upanishad, while the Upanishad generally known as Aitareya-upanishad comprises the 4th, 5th, and 6th adhyāyas only of the second Āranyaka.

The character of the three component portions of the Upanishad can best be described in Saṅkara's own words (Âr. III, 1, 1, Introd. p. 306): 'There are three classes of men who want to acquire knowledge. The highest consists of those who have turned away from the world, whose minds are fixed on one subject and collected, and who yearn to be free at once. For these a knowledge of Brahman is intended, as taught in the Ait. Âr. II, 4–6. The middle class are those who wish to become free gradually by attaining to the world of Hiranyagarbha. For them the knowledge and worship of Prāṇa (breath and life) is intended, as explained in the Ait. Âr. II, 1–3. The lowest class consists of those who do not care either for immediate or gradual freedom, but who desire nothing but offspring, cattle, &c. For these the meditative worship of the Sawhitā is intended, as explained in the third Āranyaka. They cling too strongly to the letter of the sacred text to be able to surrender it for a knowledge either of Prāṇa (life) or of Brahman.'

The connexion between the Upanishad or rather the three Upanishads and the first Āranyaka seems at first sight very slight. Still we soon perceive that it would be impossible to understand the first Upanishad, without a previous knowledge of the Mahāvrata ceremony as described in the first Āranyaka.

On this point too there are some pertinent remarks in Saṅkara's commentary on the Āranyaka II, 1, 2. 'Our first duty,' he says, 'consists in performing sacrifices, such as are described in the first portion of the Veda, the Sawhitās, Brāhmaṇas, and, to a certain extent, in the Āranyakas also. Afterwards arises a desire for knowledge, which cannot be satisfied except a man has first attained complete concentration of thought (ekāgratā). In order to acquire that concentration, the performance of certain upāsanas or meditations is enjoined, such as we find described in our Upanishad, viz. in Ār. II, 1–3.

This meditation or, as it is sometimes translated, worship is of two kinds, either brahmopāsana or pratīkopāsana. Brāhmopāsana or meditation on Brahman consists in thinking of him as distinguished by certain qualities. Pratīkopāsana or meditation on symbols consists in looking upon certain worldly objects as if they were Brahman, in order thus to withdraw the mind from the too powerful influence of external objects.

These objects, thus lifted up into symbols of Brahman, are of two kinds, either connected with sacrifice or not. In our Upanishad we have to deal with the former class only, viz. with certain portions of the Mahāvāra, as described in the first Āranyaka. In order that the mind may not be entirely absorbed by the sacrifice, it is lifted up during the performance from the consideration of these sacrificial objects to a meditation on higher objects, leading up at last to Brahman as prāna or life.

This meditation is to be performed by the priests, and while they meditate they may meditate on a hymn or on a single word of it as meaning something else, such as the sun, the earth, or the sky, but not vice versa. And if in one Sākhā, as in that of the Aitareyins, for instance, a certain hymn has been symbolically explained, the same explanation may be adopted by another Sākhā also, such as that of the Kaushitakins. It is not necessary, however, that every part of the sacrifice should be accompanied by meditation, but it is left optional to the priest in what particular meditation he wishes to engage, nor is even the time of the sacrifice the only right time for him to engage in these meditations.

1. This is the path: this sacrifice, and this Brahman. This is the true.

2. Let no man swerve from it, let no man transgress it.

---

1 Comm. The path is twofold, consisting of works and knowledge. Works or sacrifices have been described in the Samhitā, the Brāhmaṇa, and the first Āranyaka. Knowledge of Brahman forms the subject of the second and third Āranyakas. The true path is that of knowledge.
3. For the old (sages) did not transgress it, and those who did transgress, became lost.

4. This has been declared by a Rishi (Rv. VIII, 101, 14): ‘Three (classes of) people transgressed, others settled down round about the venerable (Agni, fire); the great (sun) stood in the midst of the worlds, the blowing (Vāyu, air) entered the Harits (the dawns, or the ends of the earth).’

5. When he says: ‘Three (classes of) people transgressed,’ the three (classes of) people who transgressed are what we see here (on earth, born again) as birds, trees, herbs, and serpents.

6. When he says: ‘Others settled down round about the venerable,’ he means those who now sit down to worship Agni (fire).

7. When he says: ‘The great stood in the midst of the worlds,’ the great one in the midst of the world is meant for this Āditya, the sun.

8. When he says: ‘The blowing entered the Harits,’ he means that Vāyu, the air, the purifier, entered all the corners of the earth.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. People say: ‘Uktha, uktha,’ hymns, hymns! (without knowing what uktha, hymn, means.) The hymn is truly (to be considered as) the earth, for from it all whatsoever exists arises.

2. The object of its praise is Agni (fire), and the eighty verses (of the hymn) are food, for by means of food one obtains everything.

3. The hymn is truly the sky, for the birds fly along the sky, and men drive following the sky. The object of its praise is Vāyu (air), and the eighty verses (of the hymn) are food, for by means of food one obtains everything.

4. The hymn is truly the heaven, for from its gift (rain) all whatsoever exists arises. The object of its praise is Āditya (the sun), and the eighty verses are food, for by means of food one obtains everything.

5. So much with reference to the gods (mythological); now with reference to man (physiological).

6. The hymn is truly man. He is great, he is Pragâpati. Let him think, I am the hymn.

7. The hymn is his mouth, as before in the case of the earth.

8. The object of its praise is speech, and the eighty verses (of the hymn) are food, for by means of food he obtains everything.

9. The hymn is the nostrils, as before in the case of the sky.

10. The object of its praise is breath, and the eighty verses (of the hymn) are food, for by means of food he obtains everything.

11. The slight bent (at the root) of the nose is, as it were, the place of the brilliant (Āditya, the sun).

The object is now to show that the uktha or hymn used at the Mahávrata ceremony has a deeper meaning than it seems to have, and that its highest aim is Brahman; not, however, the highest Brahman, but Brahman considered as life (prâna).
12. The hymn is the forehead, as before in the case of heaven. The object of its praise is the eye, and the eighty verses (of the hymn) are food, for by means of food he obtains everything.

13. The eighty verses (of the hymn) are alike food with reference to the gods as well as with reference to man. For all these beings breathe and live by means of food indeed. By food (given in alms, &c.) he conquers this world, by food (given in sacrifice) he conquers the other. Therefore the eighty verses (of the hymn) are alike food, with reference to the gods as well as with reference to man.

14. All this that is food, and all this that consumes food, is only the earth, for from the earth arises all whatever there is.

15. And all that goes hence (dies on earth), heaven consumes it all; and all that goes thence (returns from heaven to a new life) the earth consumes it all.

16. That earth is thus both food and consumer.

He also (the true worshipper who meditates on himself as being the uktha) is both consumer and consumed (subject and object). No one possesses that which he does not eat, or the things which do not eat him.

---

1 As a master who lives by his servants, while his servants live by him. Comm.

2 I have translated these paragraphs, as much as possible, according to the commentator. I doubt whether, either in the original or in the interpretation of the commentator, they yield any very definite sense. They are vague speculations, vague, at least, to us, though intended by the Brahmans to give a deeper meaning to certain ceremonial observances connected with the Mahâvrata. The uktha, or hymn, which is to be meditated on, as connected with the sacrifice, is part of the Mahâvrata, an important ceremony, to be performed on the last day but one (the twenty-fourth) of the Gavâmayana sacrifice. That sacrifice lasts a whole year, and its performance has been fully described in the Brâhmanas and Áranyakas. But while the ordinary performer of the Mahâvrata has simply to recite the uktha or nishkevalya-sastra, consisting of eighty verses (trîka) in the Gâyatrî, Brîhatî, and Ushnih metres, the more advanced worshipper (or priest) is to know that this uktha has a deeper meaning, and is to meditate on it as being the earth, sky, heaven, also as the human body, mouth, nostrils, and forehead. The worshipper is in fact to identify himself by meditation with the uktha in all its senses, and thus to become the universal spirit or Hiranyagarbha. By this process he becomes the consumer and consumed, the subject and object, of everything, while another sacrificer, not knowing this, remains in his limited individual sphere, or, as the text expresses it, does not possess what he cannot eat (perceive), or what cannot eat him (perceive him). The last sentence is explained differently by the commentator, but in connexion with the whole passage it seems to me to become more intelligible, if interpreted as I have proposed to interpret it.
THIRD KHANDA.

1. Next follows the origin of seed. The seed of Pragâpati are the Devas (gods). The seed of the Devas is rain. The seed of rain are herbs. The seed of herbs is food. The seed of food is seed. The seed of seed are creatures. The seed of creatures is the heart. The seed of the heart is the mind. The seed of the mind is speech (Veda). The seed of speech is action (sacrifice). The action done (in a former state) is this man, the abode of Brahman.

2. He (man) consists of food (irâ), and because he consists of food (irâmaya), he consists of gold (hiråmaya 1). He who knows this becomes golden in the other world, and is seen as golden (as the sun) for the benefit of all beings.

1 Play on words. Comm.
FOURTH KHANDA.

1. Brahman (in the shape of prāṇa, breath) entered into that man by the tips of his feet, and because Brahman entered (prāpadyata) into that man by the tips of his feet, therefore people call them the tips of the feet (prapada), but hoofs and claws in other animals.

2. Then Brahman crept up higher, and therefore they were (called)¹ the thighs (ūrû).

3. Then he said: 'Grasp wide,' and that was (called) the belly (udara).

4. Then he said: 'Make room for me,' and that was (called) the chest (uras).

5. The Sârkarâkshyas meditate on the belly as Brahman, the Ārunis on the heart ². Both (these places) are Brahman indeed ³.

6. But Brahman crept upwards and came to the head, and because he came to the head, therefore the head is called head ⁴.

7. Then these delights alighted in the head, sight, hearing, mind, speech, breath.

8. Delights alight on him who thus knows, why the head is called head.

9. These (five delights or senses) strove together, saying: 'I am the uktha (hymn), I am the uktha ⁵.' 'Well,' they said, 'let us all go out from ¹ These are all plays on words. Comm.

² This does not appear to be the case either in the Kh. Up. V, 15; 17, or in the Satapatha-brähmana X, 6, 1.
³ The pluti in tâ3i is explained as sāstrīyaprasiddhyarthâ.
⁴ All puns, as if we were to say, because he hied up to the head, therefore the head was called head.
⁵ Each wished to be identified with the uktha, as it was said before that the human body, mouth, nostrils, forehead were to be identified with the uktha. Cf. Kaush. Up. III, 3.
this body; then on whose departure this body shall fall, he shall be the uktha among us."

10. Speech went out, yet the body without speaking remained, eating and drinking.

Sight went out, yet the body without seeing remained, eating and drinking.

Hearing went out, yet the body without hearing remained, eating and drinking.

Mind went out, yet the body, as if blinking, remained, eating and drinking.

Breath went out, then when breath was gone out, the body fell.

11. It was decayed, and because people said, it decayed, therefore it was (called) body (sarīra). That is the reason of its name.

12. If a man knows this, then the evil enemy who hates him decays, or the evil enemy who hates him is defeated.

13. They strove again, saying: 'I am the uktha, I am the uktha.' 'Well,' they said, 'let us enter that body again; then on whose entrance this body shall rise again, he shall be the uktha among us.'

14. Speech entered, but the body lay still. Sight entered, but the body lay still. Hearing entered, but the body lay still. Mind entered, but the body lay still. Breath entered, and when breath had entered, the body rose, and it became the uktha.

15. Therefore breath alone is the uktha.

16. Let people know that breath is the uktha indeed.

17. The Devas (the other senses) said to breath: 'Thou art the uktha, thou art all this, we are thine, thou art ours.'

---

18. This has also been said by a Rishi (Rv. VIII, 92, 32): 'Thou art ours, we are thine.'

FIFTH KHANDA.

1. Then the Devas carried him (the breath) forth, and being carried forth, he was stretched out, and when people said, 'He was stretched out,' then it was in the morning; when they said, 'He is gone to rest,' then it was in the evening. Day, therefore, is the breathing up, night the breathing down.

2. Speech is Agni, sight that Aditya (sun), mind the moon, hearing the Dis (quarters): this is the prahitām samyoga, the union of the deities as sent forth. These deities (Agni, &c.) are thus in the body, but their (phenomenal) appearance yonder is among the deities—this was intended.

3. And Hiranyadat Vaida also, who knew this (and who by his knowledge had become Hiranyagarbha or the universal spirit), said: 'Whatever they do not give to me, they do not possess themselves.' I know the prahitām samyoga, the union of the deities, as entered into the body. This is it.

1 All these are plays on words, prātar being derived from prātāyi, sāyam from samāgāt. The real object, however, is to show that breath, which is the uktha, which is the worshipper, is endowed with certain qualities, viz. time, speech, &c.

2 The meaning is, that the four deities, Agni, Aditya, Moon, and the Dis proceed from their own places to dwell together in the body of man, and that this is called the prahitām samyogah. Prahit is explained as prahita, placed, sent. It is probably formed from hi, not from dhā. Prahitoh samyoganam is the name of a Sāman, Ind. Stud. III, 225. As Devas or gods they appear each in its own place. The whole passage is very obscure.

3 All this is extremely obscure, possibly incorrect. For yam, unless it refers to some other word, we expect yan. For dadyuḥ one expects dadyat. What is intended is that Hiranyadat had
4. To him who knows this all creatures, without being constrained, offer gifts.

5. That breath is (to be called) sattya (the true), for sat is breath, ti is food, yam is the sun. This is threefold, and threefold the eye also may be called, it being white, dark, and the pupil. He who knows why true is true (why sattya is sattya), even if he should speak falsely, yet what he says is true.

SIXTH KHANDA.

1. Speech is his (the breath's) rope, the names the knots. Thus by his speech as by a rope, and by his names as by knots, all this is bound. For all this are names indeed, and with speech he calls everything.

2. People carry him who knows this, as if they were bound by a rope.

3. Of the body of the breath thus meditated on, the Ushṇih verse forms the hairs, the Gāyatri the skin, the Trishṭubh the flesh, the Anushṭubh the muscles, the Gagati the bone, the Paṅkti the marrow, the Brśhati the breath (prāna). He is covered with the verses (khandas, metres). Because he is thus covered with verses, therefore they call them khandas (coverings, metres).

4. If a man knows the reason why khandas are called khandas, the verses cover him in whatever place he likes against any evil deed.

---

through meditation acquired identity with the universal spirit, and that therefore he might say that whatever was not surrendered to him did not really belong to anybody. On Hiranyadat, see Ait. Brāhm. III, 6.

2 The rope is supposed to be the chief rope to which various smaller ropes are attached for fastening animals.

3 Here conceived as the air breathed, not as the deity. Comm.
5. This is said by a Rishi (Rv. I, 164, 13):

6. 'I saw (the breath) as a guardian, never tiring, coming and going on his ways (the arteries). That breath (in the body, being identified with the sun among the Devas), illuminating the principal and intermediate quarters of the sky, is returning constantly in the midst of the worlds.'

He says: 'I saw a guardian,' because he, the breath, is a guardian, for he guards everything.

7. He says: 'Never tiring,' because the breath never rests.

8. He says: 'Coming and going on his ways,' because the breath comes and goes on his ways.

9. He says: 'Illuminating the principal and intermediate,' because he illuminates these only, the principal and intermediate quarters of the sky.

10. He says: 'He is returning constantly in the midst of the worlds,' because he returns indeed constantly in the midst of the worlds.

11. And then, there is another verse (Rv. I, 55, 81): 'They are covered like caves by those who make them,'

12. For all this is covered indeed by breath.

13. This ether is supported by breath as Brähmati, and as this ether is supported by breath as Brähmati, so one should know that all things, not excepting ants, are supported by breath as Brähmati.

Seventh Khanda.

1. Next follow the powers of that Person 1.

2. By his speech earth and fire were created.

1 The purusha, as described before in the second chapter, is the Pragâpati or universal spirit with whom the worshipper is to identify himself by meditation. The manifestations of his power consist in creating the earth, fire, the sky, the air, heaven, the sun.
Herbs are produced on the earth, and Agni (fire) makes them ripe and sweet. 'Take this, take this,' thus saying do earth and fire serve their parent, speech.

3. As far as the earth reaches, as far as fire reaches, so far does his world extend, and as long as the world of the earth and fire does not decay, so long does his world not decay who thus knows this power of speech.

4. By breath (in the nose) the sky and the air were created. People follow the sky, and hear along the sky, while the air carries along pure scent. Thus do sky and air serve their parent, the breath.

As far as the sky reaches, as far as the air reaches, so far does his world extend, and as long as the world of the sky and the air does not decay, so long does his world not decay who thus knows this power of breath.

5. By his eye heaven and the sun were created. Heaven gives him rain and food, while the sun causes his light to shine. Thus do the heaven and the sun serve their parent, the eye.

As far as heaven reaches and as far as the sun reaches, so far does his world extend, and as long as the world of heaven and the sun does not decay, so long does his world not decay who thus knows the power of the eye.

6. By his ear the quarters and the moon were created. From all the quarters they come to him, and from all the quarters he hears, while the moon produces for him the bright and the dark halves for the sake of sacrificial work. Thus do the quarters and the moon serve their parent, the ear.

As far as the quarters reach and as far as the moon reaches, so far does his world extend, and as long as the world of the quarters and the moon does not decay, so long does his world not decay who thus knows the power of the ear.

7. By his mind the water and Varuṇa were created. Water yields to him faith (being used for sacred acts), Varuṇa keeps his offspring within the law. Thus do water and Varuṇa serve their parent, the mind.

As far as water reaches and as far as Varuṇa reaches, so far does his world extend, and as long as the world of water and Varuṇa does not decay, so long does his world not decay who thus knows the power of the mind.

Eighth Khandā.

1. Was it water really? Was it water? Yes, all this was water indeed. This (water) was the root (cause), that (the world) was the shoot (effect). He (the person) is the father, they (earth, fire, &c.) are the sons. Whatever there is belonging to the son, belongs to the father; whatever there is belonging to the father, belongs to the son. This was intended.

2. Mahidāsa Aitareya, who knew this, said: 'I know myself (reaching) as far as the gods, and I know the gods (reaching) as far as me. For these

1 Having described how Prāṇa, the breath, and his companions or servants created the world, he now discusses the question of the material cause of the world out of which it was created. Water, which is said to be the material of the world, is explained by the commentator to mean here the five elements.

2 Cause and effect are not entirely separated, therefore water, as the elementary cause, and earth, fire, &c., as its effect, are one; likewise the worshipper, as the father, and the earth, fire, &c. as his sons, as described above. Mūla and tūla, root and shoot, are evidently chosen for the sake of the rhyme, to signify cause and effect.
gods receive their gifts from hence, and are supported from hence.'

3. This is the mountain, viz. eye, ear, mind, speech, and breath. They call it the mountain of Brahman.

4. He who knows this, throws down the evil enemy who hates him; the evil enemy who hates him is defeated.

5. He (the Prána, identified with Brahman) is the life, the breath; he is being (while the ātman remains), and not-being (when the ātman departs).

6. The Devas (speech, &c.) worshipped him (prána) as Bhūti or being, and thus they became great beings. And therefore even now a man who sleeps, breathes like bhûrbhu.

7. The Asuras worshipped him as Abhûti or not-being, and thus they were defeated.

8. He who knows this, becomes great by himself, while the evil enemy who hates him, is defeated.

9. He (the breath) is death (when he departs), and immortality (while he abides).

10. And this has been said by a Rishi (Rv. I, 164, 38):—

11. 'Downwards and upwards he (the wind of the breath) goes, held by food;’—for this up-breathing, being held back by the down-breathing, does not move forward (and leave the body altogether).

12. 'The immortal dwells with the mortal;’—for through him (the breath) all this dwells together, the bodies being clearly mortal, but this being (the breath), being immortal.

1 Prána is called the girih, because it is swallowed or hidden by the other senses (giru). Again a mere play of words, intended to show that Brahman under the form of Prána, or life, is to be meditated on.
13. 'These two (body and breath) go for ever in different directions (the breath moving the senses of the body, the body supporting the senses of the breath: the former going upwards to another world, the body dying and remaining on earth). They increase the one (the body), but they do not increase the other,' i.e. they increase these bodies (by food), but this being (breath) is immortal.

14. He who knows this becomes immortal in that world (having become united with Hiranyagarbha), and is seen as immortal (in the sun) by all beings, yea, by all beings.

SECOND ADHYĀYA ¹.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. He (the sun), who shines, honoured this world (the body of the worshipper, by entering into it), in the form of man ² (the worshipper who meditates on breath). For he who shines (the sun) is (the same as) the breath. He honoured this (body of the worshipper) during a hundred years, therefore there are a hundred years in the life of a man. Because he honoured him during a hundred years, therefore there are (the poets of the first Mandala of the Rigveda, called) the Satarāśin, (having honour for a hundred years.) Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), the Satarêin poets 1.

¹ In the first adhyāya various forms of meditating on Uktha, conceived as Prāna (life), have been declared. In the second some other forms of meditation, all extremely fanciful, are added. They are of interest, however, as showing the existence of the hymns of the Rig-veda, divided and arranged as we now possess them, at the time when this Áranyaka was composed.

² The identity of the sun and of breath as living in man has been established before. It is the same power in both, conceived either adhidaivatam (mythological) or adhyatmam (physiological).

2. He (breath) placed himself in the midst of all whatsoever exists. Because he placed himself in the midst of all whatsoever exists, therefore there are (the poets of the second to the ninth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) the Mâdhyamas. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), the Mâdhyama poets.

3. He as up-breathing is the swallower (gritsa), as down-breathing he is delight (mada). Because as up-breathing he is swallower (gritsa) and as down-breathing delight (mada), therefore there is (the poet of the second Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Gritsamada. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Gritsamada.

4. Of him (breath) all this whatsoever was a friend. Because of him all (visvam) this whatsoever was a friend (mitram), therefore there is (the poet of the third Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Visvámîtra. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Visvámîtra.

5. The Devas (speech, &c.) said to him (the breath) : 'He is to be loved by all of us.' Because the Devas said of him, that he was to be loved (vâma) by all of them, therefore there is (the poet of the fourth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Vâmadeva. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Vâmadeva.

6. He (breath) guarded all this whatsoever from evil. Because he guarded (âtrâyata) all this whatso-

---

1 The real ground for the name is that the poets of the first Mandala composed on an average each about a hundred Rik verses.
ever from evil, therefore there are (the poets of the fifth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Atrayah. Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), Atrayah.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. He (breath) is likewise a Bibhradvâga (bringer of offspring). Offspring is vâga, and he (breath) supports offspring. Because he supports it, therefore there is (the poet of the sixth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Bharadvâga. Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), Bharadvâga.

2. The Devas (speech, &c.) said to him: 'He it is who chiefly causes us to dwell on earth.' Because the Devas said of him, that he chiefly caused them to dwell on earth, therefore there is (the poet of the seventh Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) Vasishtha. Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), Vasishtha 1.

3. He (breath) went forth towards 2 all this whatsoever. Because he went forth toward all this whatsoever, therefore there are (the poets of the eighth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) the Pragâthas. Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), the Pragâthas.

4. He (breath) purified all this whatsoever. Because he purified all this whatsoever, therefore there

---

1 I translate in accordance with the commentator, and probably with the intention of the author. The same etymology is repeated in the commentary on II, 2, 4, 2. It would be more natural to take vasishtha in the sense of the richest.

2 This is the interpretation of the commentator, and the preposition abhi seems to show that the author too took that view of the etymology of pragâtha.
are (the hymns and also the poets\(^1\) of the ninth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) the Pavamânis. Therefore people called him who is really Prâna (breath), the Pavamânis.

5. He (breath) said: ‘Let me be everything whatsoever, small (kshudra) and great (mahat), and this became the Kshudrasûktas and Mahâsûktas.’ Therefore there were (the hymns and also the poets of the tenth Mandala of the Rig-veda, called) the Kshudrasûktas (and Mahâsûktas). Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), the Kshudrasûktas (and Mahâsûktas).

6. He (breath) said once: ‘You have said what is well said (su-ukta) indeed. This became a Sûkta (hymn).’ Therefore there was the Sûkta. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Sûkta\(^2\).

7. He (breath) is a Rik (verse), for he did honour\(^3\) to all beings (by entering into them). Because he did honour to all beings, therefore there was the Rik verse. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Rik.

8. He (breath) is an Ardharâ (half-verse), for he did honour to all places (ardha)\(^4\). Because he did honour to all places, therefore there was the Ardharâ. Therefore people call him who is really Prâna (breath), Ardharâ.

---

\(^1\) It seems, indeed, as if in the technical language of the Brahmins, the poets of the ninth Mandala were sometimes called Pavamânis, and the hymns of the tenth Mandala Kshudrasûktas and Mahâsûktas (masc.) Cf. Ārsheya-brâhmaṇa, ed. Burnell, p. 42.

\(^2\) The poet also is called Sûkta, taddrashâpi sûktanâmako ‘bhût. Comm.

\(^3\) I translate according to the commentator.

\(^4\) Ardha means both half and place.
9. He (breath) is a Pada (word)\(^1\), for he got into all these beings. Because he got (pādi) into all these beings, therefore there was the Pada (word). Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), Pada.

10. He (breath) is an Akshara (syllable), for he pours out (ksharati) gifts to all these beings, and without him no one can pour out (atiksharati) gifts. Therefore there was the Akshara (syllable). Therefore people call him who is really Prāna (breath), Akshara\(^2\).

11. Thus all these Rik verses, all Vedas, all sounds\(^3\) are one word, viz. Prāna (breath). Let him know that Prāna is all Rik verses.

Third Khanda.

1. While Visvāmitra was going to repeat the hymns of this day (the mahāvrata), Indra sat down near him\(^4\). Visvāmitra (guessing that Indra wanted food) said to him, 'This (the verses of the hymn) is food,' and repeated the thousand Br̥hati verses\(^5\).

---

\(^1\) It may also be intended for pāda, foot of a verse.

\(^2\) The Prāna (breath) is to be meditated on as all hymns, all poets, all words, &c. Comm.

\(^3\) All aspirated sonant consonants. Comm.

\(^4\) Upanishasasāda, instead of upanishasāda. The mistake is probably due to a correction, sa for sha; the commentator, however, considers it as a Vedic license. Sakāro 'dhikas khāndasaḥ.

\(^5\) These are meant for the Nishkevalya hymn recited at the noon-libation of the Mahāvrata. That hymn consists of ten parts, corresponding, as we saw, to ten parts of a bird, viz. its body, neck, head, root of wings, right wing, left wing, tail, belly, chest, and thighs. The verses corresponding to these ten parts, beginning with tad id āsa bhuvanesu gyeshiḥam, are given in the first Āraṇyaka, and more fully in the fifth Āraṇyaka by Saunaka.
By means of this he went to the delightful home of Indra (Svarga).

2. Indra said to him: ‘Rishi, thou hast come to my delightful home. Rishi, repeat a second hymn.’ Visvamitra (guessing that Indra wanted food) said to him, ‘This (the verses of the hymn) is food,’ and repeated the thousand Brihati verses. By means of this he went to the delightful home of Indra (Svarga).

3. Indra said to him: ‘Rishi, thou hast come to my delightful home. Rishi, repeat a third hymn.’ Visvamitra (guessing that Indra wanted food) said to him, ‘This (the verses of the hymn) is food,’ and repeated the thousand Brihati verses. By means of this he went to the delightful home of Indra (Svarga).

4. Indra said to him: ‘Rishi, thou hast come to my delightful home. I grant thee a boon.’ Visvamitra said: ‘May I know thee.’ Indra said: ‘I am Prâna (breath), O Rishi, thou art Prâna, all things are Prâna. For it is Prâna who shines as the sun, and I here pervade all regions under that form. This food of mine (the hymn) is my friend and my support (dakshinâ). This is the food prepared by Visvamitra. I am verily he who shines (the sun).’

Though they consist of many metres, yet, when one counts the syllables, they give a thousand Brihati verses, each consisting of thirty-six syllables.

1 Although the Nishkevalya is but one hymn, consisting of eighty trikas, yet as these eighty trikas were represented as three kinds of food (see Ait. Âr. II, 1, 2, 2–4), the hymn is represented as three hymns, first as eighty Gâyatrî trikas, then as eighty Brihati trikas, lastly as eighty Ushnîh trikas.
FOURTH KHANa.

1. This then becomes perfect as a thousand of Br̥ihāti verses. Its consonants form its body, its voice (vowels) the soul, its sibilants the air of the breath.

2. He who knew this became Vasishṭha, he took this name from thence.

3. Indra verily declared this to Visvāmitra, and Indra verily declared this to Bharadvāga. Therefore Indra is invoked by him as a friend.

4. This becomes perfect as a thousand of Br̥ihāti verses, and of that hymn perfect with a thousand Br̥ihāti verses, there are 36,000 syllables. So many are also the thousands of days of a hundred years (36,000). With the consonants they fill the nights, with the vowels the days.

5. This becomes perfect as a thousand of Br̥ihāti verses. He who knows this, after this thousand of Br̥ihātiis thus accomplished, becomes full of knowledge, full of the gods, full of Brahman, full of the immortal, and then goes also to the gods.

6. What I am (the worshipper), that is he (sun); what he is, that am I.

---

1 Vyañganāni, explained by kādini.
2 Ghosha, explained by aspirated sonant consonants.
3 Ātmā, explained by madhyasarīram.
4 Sashasahā. Comm.
5 He became Prāna, and because Prāna causes all to dwell, or covers all (vāsayati), therefore the Rishi was called Vasishṭha. Comm. Cf. Ait. Âr. II, 2, 2, 2.
6 At the Subrahmanyā ceremony in the Soma sacrifices, the invocations are, Indra ā gakkha, hariva ā gakkha.
7 Cf. Ait. Âr. II, 3, 8, 8.
8 Each Br̥ihāti has thirty-six syllables.
7. This has been said by a Rishi (Rv. I, 115, 1): 'The sun is the self of all that moves and rests.'
8. Let him look to that, let him look to that!

THIRD ADHYÂYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. He who knows himself as the fivefold hymn (uktha), the emblem of Prâna (breath), from whence all this springs, he is clever. These five are the earth, air, ether, water, and fire (gyotis). This is the self, the fivefold uktha. For from him all this springs, and into him it enters again (at the dissolution of the world). He who knows this, becomes the refuge of his friends.

2. And to him who knows the food (object) and the feeder (subject) in that uktha, a strong son is born, and food is never wanting. Water and earth are food, for all food consists of these two. Fire and air are the feeder, for by means of them man eats all food. Ether is the bowl, for all this is poured into the ether. He who knows this, becomes the bowl or support of his friends.

3. To him who knows the food and the feeder in that uktha, a strong son is born, and food is never wanting. Herbs and trees are food, animals the feeder, for animals eat herbs and trees.

4. Of them again those who have teeth above

---

1 In this adhyâya some more qualities are explained belonging to the Mahâvrata ceremonial and the hymns employed at it, which can be meditated on as referring to Prâna, life.
2 Because the world is the result or reward for performing a meditation on the uktha. Comm.
3 The digestive fire is lighted by the air of the breath. Comm.
and below, shaped after the likeness of man, are feeders, the other animals are food. Therefore these overcome the other animals, for the eater is over the food.

5. He who knows this is over his friends.

SECOND KHANDA 1.

1. He who knows the gradual development of the self in him (the man conceived as the ukttha), obtains himself more development.

2. There are herbs and trees and all that is animated, and he knows the self gradually developing in them. For in herbs and trees sap only is seen 2, but thought (vīttā) in animated beings.

3. Among animated beings again the self develops gradually, for in some sap (blood) is seen (as well as thought), but in others thought is not seen.

4. And in man again the self develops gradually, for he is most endowed with knowledge. He says what he has known, he sees what he has known 3. He knows what is to happen to-morrow, he knows heaven and hell. By means of the mortal he desires the immortal—thus is he endowed.

5. With regard to the other animals hunger and thirst only are a kind of understanding. But they do not say what they have known, nor do they see

---

1 This treats of the gradual development of life in man, particularly of the development of a thinking soul (kaitanya).
2 In stones there is not even sap, but only being, sattā. Comm.
3 What he has known yesterday he remembers, and is able to say before men, I know this. And when he has known a thing he remembers it, and goes to the same place to see it again. Comm.
what they have known. They do not know what is to happen to-morrow, nor heaven and hell. They go so far and no further, for they are born according to their knowledge (in a former life).

Third Khanda.

1. That man (conceived as uktha) is the sea, rising beyond the whole world¹. Whatever he reaches, he wishes to go beyond². If he reaches the sky, he wishes to go beyond.

2. If he should reach that (heavenly) world, he would wish to go beyond.

3. That man is fivefold. The heat in him is fire; the apertures (of the senses) are ether; blood, mucus, and seed are water; the body is earth; breath is air.

4. That air is fivefold, viz. up-breathing, down-breathing, back-breathing, out-breathing, on-breathing. The other powers (devatās), viz. sight, hearing, mind, and speech, are comprised under up-breathing and down-breathing. For when breath departs, they also depart with it.

5. That man (conceived as uktha) is the sacrifice, which is a succession now of speech and now of thought. That sacrifice is fivefold, viz. the Agni-hotra, the new and full moon sacrifices, the four-monthly sacrifices, the animal sacrifice, the Soma sacrifice. The Soma sacrifice is the most perfect of sacrifices, for in it these five kinds of ceremonies are seen: the first which precedes the libations (the Dikshā, &c.), then three libations, and what follows (the Avabhr̥ṭha, &c.) is the fifth.

¹ Bhūloka. Comm.
² Should it not be atya eva manvāt?
FOURTH KHANDA.

1. He who knows one sacrifice above another, one day above another, one deity above the others, he is clever. Now this great uktha (the nishkevalya-sastra) is the sacrifice above another, the day above another, the deity above others.

2. This uktha is fivefold. With regard to its being performed as a Stoma (chorus), it is Trivṛt, Pañkadasa, Saptadasa, Ekavimsa, and Pañkavimsa. With regard to its being performed as a Sāman (song), it is Gāyatra, Rathantara, Brāhat, Bhadra, and Rāgana. With regard to metre, it is Gāyatri, Ushvih, Brāhati, Trishūbha, and Dvipadā. And the explanation (given before in the Āranyaka) is that it is the head, the right wing, the left wing, the tail, and the body of the bird.

---

1 The uktha is to be conceived as prāṇa, breath or life, and this prāṇa was shown to be above the other powers (devatās), speech, hearing, seeing, mind. The uktha belongs to the Mahāvrata day, and that is the most important day of the Soma sacrifice. The Soma sacrifice, lastly, is above all other sacrifices.

2 All these are technicalities connected with the singing and reciting of the uktha. The commentator says: The stoma is a collection of single Rik verses occurring in the trikas which have to be sung. The Trivṛt stoma, as explained in the Sāma-brāhmaṇa, is as follows: There are three Sūktas, each consisting of three verses, the first being upāsmai gāyata, S. V. Uttarārkīka I, 1, 1=Rv. IX, 11. The Udgātri first sings the first three verses in each hymn. This is the first round. He then sings the three middle verses in each hymn. This is the second round. He lastly sings the last three verses in each hymn. This is the third round. This song is called Udyati.

The Pañkadasa stoma is formed out of one Sūkta only, consisting of three verses. In the first round he sings the first verse

---

Hīṅkrī with dative is explained as gai with accusative.
3. He performs the Prastâva in five ways, he performs the Udgitha in five ways, he performs the three times, the second and third once. In the second round he sings the middle verse three times, in the third round he sings the last verse three times. This song is called Vishñuti.

The Saptadarâ stoma is formed in the same manner, only that in the first round he sings the first verse three times, in the second the middle verse three times, in the third round the middle and last verses three times. This song is called Darasapta.

The Ekavimsa stoma is formed in the same manner, only that in the first round he sings the last verse once, in the second the first verse once, in the third the middle verse once, while the other verses are each repeated three times. This song is called Saptasaptini.

The Pañkavimsa stoma is formed in the same manner, only that in the first round he sings the first verse three times, the second four times, the last once; in the second round the first once, the second three times, the third four times; in the third round the first five times, the second once, the last three times; or he sings in the third round the first verse four times, the second twice, the last three times.

Sâyana in his commentary on the Ait. Âr. takes the Trivrit stoma to be formed out of three hymns, each consisting of three verses, while he says that the other stomas are formed out of one hymn only. B. and R., s. v. trivrit, state that this stoma consists of verses 1, 4, 7; 2, 5, 8; and 3, 6, 9 of the Rig-veda hymn IX, 11, but, according to Sâyana, the stoma consists (1) of the first verses of the three Sûktas, upâsmai gáyata, dvidyutatyâ, and pavamânasya at the beginning of the Sâma-veda-Uttarârâkika,
(2) of the second, (3) of the third verses of the same three hymns.
Mahidhâra (Yv. X, 9) takes the same view, though the MSS. seem to have left out the description of the second paryâya, while Sâyana in his commentary to the Tândya-brâhma seems to support the opinion of B. and R. There is an omission, however, in the printed text of the commentary, which makes it difficult to see the exact meaning of Sâyana.

The Pañkadaasa stoma is well described by Sâyana, Tândya Br.
II, 4. Taking the Sûkta agna å yâhi (Uttarârâkika I, 1, 4=Rv. VI, 16, 10-12), he shows the stoma to consist of (1) verse 1×3, 2, 3;
(2) verse 1, 2×3, 3; (3) verse 1, 2, 3×3.

The five Sâmans are explained by the commentator. The Pratihåra in five ways, he performs the Upadrava in five ways, he performs the Nidhana in five ways. All this together forms one thousand Stobhas, or musical syllables.

4. Thus also are the Rik verses, contained in the Nishkevalya, recited (by the Hotrî) in five orders. What precedes the eighty trîkas, that is one order, then follow the three sets of eighty trîkas each, and what comes after is the fifth order.

Gâyatra is formed out of the Rik (III, 62, 10) tat savitur varenyam. The Rathantara is formed out of the Rik (VII, 32, 22) abhi tvâ sûra nonuma. The Brûhat is formed out of the Rik (VI, 46, 1) tvâm id dhi havâmahe. The Bhadra is formed out of the Rik (X, 157, 1) imâ nu kam. The Râgana is formed out of the Rik (VII, 27, 1) indram naro nemadhitâ.

The metres require no explanation.

In identifying certain portions of the Nishkevalya hymn with a bird, the head of the bird corresponds to the hymns indram id gâthinaH, &c.; the right wing to the hymns abhi tvâ sûra, &c.; the left wing to the hymns tvâm id dhi, &c.; the tail to the hymns imâ nu kam, &c.; the body to the hymns tad id ása, &c. All this was explained in the first Áranyaka.

1 The Sâmagas sing the Râgana at the Mahâvrata, and in that Sâman there are, as usual, five parts, the Prastâva, Udgîtha, Pratihåra, Upadrava, and Nidhana. The Prastotrî, when singing the Prastâva portions, sings them five times. The Udgâtrî and Pratihartî sing their portions, the Udgîtha and Pratihåra, five times. The Udgâtrî again sings the Upadrava five times. And all the Udgâtrîs together sing the Nidhana five times.

2 The Stobha syllables are syllables without any meaning, added when verses have to be sung, in order to have a support for the music. See Kh. Up. I, 13. In singing the five Sámans, each five times, one thousand of such Stobha syllables are required.

3 There are in the Nishkevalya hymn, which the Hotrî has to recite, three sets of eighty trîkas each. The first, consisting of Gâyatrîs, begins with mahaH indro ya ogasâ. The second, consisting of Brûhatîs, begins with mâ âid anyad. The third, consisting of Ushâhîs, begins with ya indra somapâtama. These three sets form the food of the bird, as the emblem of the sāstra. The hymns
5. This (the hymns of this Šastra) as a whole (if properly counted with the Stobha syllables) comes to one thousand (of Brahma verses). That (thousand) is the whole, and ten, ten is called the whole. For number is such (measured by ten). Ten tens are a hundred, ten hundreds are a thousand, and that is the whole. These are the three metres (the tens, pervading everything). And this food also (the three sets of hymns being represented as food) is threefold, eating, drinking, and chewing. He obtains that food by those (three numbers, ten, hundred, and thousand, or by the three sets of eighty ṛṣyas).

FIFTH KHANDA.

1. This (nishkevalya-śastra) becomes perfect as a thousand of Brahma verses.

2. Some teachers (belonging to a different Śākha) recognise a thousand of different metres (not of Brahma only). They say: 'Is another thousand (a thousand of other verses) good? Let us say it is good.'

3. Some say, a thousand of Trishṭubh verses, others a thousand of Gagati verses, others a thousand of Anushṭubh verses.

4. This has been said by a Rishi (Rv. X, 124, 9):—

5. 'Poets through their understanding discovered Indra dancing an Anushṭubh.' This is meant to say: They discovered (and meditated) in speech (called Anushṭubh)—at that time (when they wor-which precede these, form the body, head, and wings of the bird. This is one order. Then follow the three sets of eighty ṛṣyas each; and lastly, the fifth order, consisting of the hymns which form the belly and the legs of the bird.

shipped the uktha)—the Prāna (breath) connected with Indra.

6. He (who takes the recited verses as Anushṭubhs) is able to become celebrated and of good report.

7. No! he says; rather is such a man liable to die before his time. For that self (consisting of Anushṭubhs) is incomplete. For if a man confines himself to speech, not to breath, then driven by his mind, he does not succeed with speech.

8. Let him work towards the Brīhatī, for the Brīhatī (breath) is the complete self.

9. That self (gīvātman) is surrounded on all sides by members. And as that self is on all sides surrounded by members, the Brīhatī also is on all sides surrounded by metres.

10. For the self (in the heart) is the middle of these members, and the Brīhatī is the middle of the metres.

11. He is able to become celebrated and of good

---

1 This passage is obscure, and probably corrupt. I have followed the commentator as much as possible. He says: 'If the Hotri priest proceeds with reciting the sastra, looking to the Anushṭubh, which is speech, and not to the thousand of Brīhatīs which are breath, then, neglecting the Brīhatī (breath), and driven by his mind to the Anushṭubh (speech), he does not by his speech obtain that sastra. For in speech without breath the Hotri cannot, through the mere wish of the mind, say the sastra, the activity of all the senses being dependent on breath.' The commentator therefore takes vāgabhi for vākm abhi, or for some old locative case formed by abhi. He also would seem to have read prāne na. One might attempt another construction, though it is very doubtful. One might translate, 'For that self, which is speech, is incomplete, because he understands if driven to the mind by breath, not (if driven) by speech.'

2 Either in the sastra, or in the list of metres, there being some that have more, others that have less syllables.
report, but (the other) able to die before his time,' thus he said. For the Brīhāti is the complete self, therefore let him work towards the Brīhāti (let him reckon the sastra recitation as a thousand Brīhātis).

Sixth Khanda.

1. This (nishkevalya-sastra) becomes perfect as a thousand of Brīhāti verses. In this thousand of Brīhātis there are one thousand one hundred and twenty-five Anushūbhs. For the smaller is contained in the larger.

2. This has been said by a Rishi (Rv. VIII, 76, 12):—

3. 'A speech of eight feet;'—because there are eight feet of four syllables each in the Anushūbhra.

4. 'Of nine corners;'—because the Brīhāti becomes nine-cornered (having nine feet of four syllables each).

5. 'Touching the truth;'—because speech (Anushūbhra) is truth, touched by the verse (Brīhāti)\(^1\).

6. 'He (the Hotri) makes the body out of Indra;'—for out of this thousand of Brīhāti verses turned into Anushūbhs, and therefore out of Prāna as connected with Indra\(^2\), and out of the Brīhāti (which is Prāna), he makes speech, that is Anushūbhra, as a body\(^3\).

7. This Mahaduktha is the highest development

---

1 Vāk, speech, taking the form of Anushūbhra, and being joined with the Rik, or the Brīhāti, touches the true, i.e. Prāna, breath, which is to be meditated on under the form of the Brīhāti. Comm.
2 Cf. Ait. Âr. II, 2, 3, 4.
3 Because the Anushūbhra is made out of the Brīhāti, the Brīhāti being breath, therefore the Anushūbhra is called its body.
of speech, and it is fivefold, viz. measured, not measured, music, true, and untrue.

8. A Rik verse, a gâthâ, a kumbyâ are measured (metrical). A Yagus line, an invocation, and general remarks, these are not measured (they are in prose). A Sâman, or any portion (parvan) of it, is music. Om is true, Na is untrue.

9. What is true (Om) is the flower and fruit of speech. He is able to become celebrated and of good report, for he speaks the true (Om), the flower and fruit of speech.

10. Now the untrue is the root of speech, and as a tree whose root is exposed dries up and perishes, thus a man who says what is untrue exposes his root, dries up and perishes. Therefore one should not say what is untrue, but guard oneself from it.

11. That syllable Om (yes) goes forward (to the first cause of the world) and is empty. Therefore if a man says Om (yes) to everything, then that (which he gives away) is wanting to him here. If he says Om (yes) to everything, then he would empty himself, and would not be capable of any enjoyments.

12. That syllable Na (no) is full for oneself. If a man says No to everything, then his reputation

---

1 A gâthâ is likewise in verse, for instance, prâtaḥ prâtar anrîtam te vaddanti.
2 A kumbyâ is a metrical precept, such as, brahmaḥ āryasyāpo-sânam karma kuru, divā mà svâpsih, &c.
3 Such as arthavâdas, explanatory passages, also gossip, such as is common in the king's palace, laughing at people, &c.
4 As diametrically opposed to the flowers and fruits which represent the true. Comm.
5 Then that man is left empty here on earth for that enjoyment. Comm.
6 He who always says No, keeps everything to himself.
would become evil, and that would ruin him even here.

13. Therefore let a man give at the proper time only, not at the wrong time. Thus he unites the true and the untrue, and from the union of those two he grows, and becomes greater and greater.

14. He who knows this speech of which this (the mahadukththa) is a development, he is clever. A is the whole of speech, and manifested through different kinds of contact (mutes) and of wind (sibilants), it becomes manifold and different.

15. Speech if uttered in a whisper is breath, if spoken aloud, it is body. Therefore (if whispered) it is almost hidden, for what is incorporeal is almost hidden, and breath is incorporeal. But if spoken aloud, it is body, and therefore it is perceptible, for body is perceptible.

eighth Khanda.

1. This (nishkevalya-sastra) becomes perfect as a thousand of Bri'hatis. It is glory (the glorious Brahman, not the absolute Brahman), it is Indra. Indra is the lord of all beings. He who thus knows Indra as the lord of all beings, departs from this world by loosening the bonds of life—so said Mahidâsa Aitareya. Having departed he becomes Indra (or Hiranyagarbha) and shines in those worlds.

1 The commentator explains visrasâ by 'merging his manhood in the identity with all,' and doing this while still alive. Visras is the gradual loosening of the body, the decay of old age, but here it has the meaning of vairâgya rather, the shaking off of all that ties the Self to this body or this life.

2 The fourteen worlds in the egg of Brahman. Comm. Some hold that he who enters on this path, and becomes deity, does not
2. And with regard to this they say: 'If a man obtains the other world in this form (by meditating on the prāṇa, breath, which is the uktha, the hymn of the mahāvrata), then in what form does he obtain this world?'

3. Here the blood of the woman is a form of Agni (fire); therefore no one should despise it. And the seed of the man is a form of Āditya (sun); therefore no one should despise it. This self (the woman) gives her self (skin, blood, and flesh) to that self (fat, bone, and marrow), and that self (man) gives his self (fat, bone, and marrow) to this self (skin, blood, and flesh). Thus these two grow together. In this form (belonging to the woman and to fire) he goes to that world (belonging to the man and the sun), and in that form (belonging to man and the sun) he goes to this world (belonging to the woman and to fire).

Eighth Khanda.

1. Here (with regard to obtaining Hiranya-garbha) there are these Slokas:

arrive at final liberation. Others, however, show that this identification with the uktha, and through it with the prāṇa (breath) and Hiranya-garbha, is provisional only, and intended to prepare the mind of the worshipper for the reception of the highest knowledge of Brahman.

1 The last line on page 246 should, I think, be the penultimate line of page 247.

2 The body consists of six elements, and is hence called shāl-kauśika. Of these, three having a white appearance (fat, bone, and marrow), come from the sun and from man; three having a red appearance, come from fire and from the woman.

3 It is well therefore to shake off this body, and by meditating on the uktha to obtain identity with Hiranya-garbha. Comm.
2. The fivefold body into which the indestructible (prâna, breath) enters, that body which the harnessed horses (the senses) draw about, that body where the true of the true (the highest Brahman) follows after, in that body (of the worshipper) all gods\(^1\) become one.

3. That body into which goes the indestructible (the breath) which we have joined (in meditation), proceeding from the indestructible (the highest Brahman), that body which the harnessed horses (the senses) draw about, that body where the true of the true follows after, in that body all gods become one.

4. After separating themselves from the Yes and No of language, and of all that is hard and cruel, poets have discovered (what they sought for); dependent on names they rejoiced in what had been revealed\(^2\).

5. That in which the poets rejoiced (the revealed nature of prâna, breath), in it the gods exist all joined together. Having driven away evil by means of that Brahman (which is hidden in prâna), the enlightened man goes to the Svarga world (becomes one with Hiranyagarbha\(^3\), the universal spirit).

6. No one wishing to describe him (prâna, breath) by speech, describes him by calling him 'woman,' 'neither woman nor man,' or 'man' (all such names applying only to the material body, and not to prâna or breath).

\(^{1}\) The worshipper identifies himself by meditation with prâna, breath, which comprehends all gods. These gods (Agni and the rest) appear in the forms of speech, &c. Comm.

\(^{2}\) The prâna, breath, and their identity with it through meditation or worship. Comm.

\(^{3}\) Sarvâhâmâni hiranyagarbha iti sûre/k. Comm.
7. Brahman (as hidden beneath prâna) is called the A; and the I (ego) is gone there (the worshipper should know that he is uktha and prâna).

8. This becomes perfect as a thousand of Brâhati verses, and of that hymn, perfect with a thousand Brâhati verses, there are 36,000 syllables. So many are also the thousands of days of human life. By means of the syllable of life (the a) alone (which is contained in that thousand of hymns) does a man obtain the day of life (the mahâvrata day, which completes the number of the days in the Gavâmayana sacrifice), and by means of the day of life (he obtains) the syllable of life.

9. Now there is a chariot of the god (prâna) destroying all desires (for the worlds of Indra, the moon, the earth, all of which lie below the place of Hiranyagarbha). Its front part (the point of the two shafts of the carriage where the yoke is fastened) is speech, its wheels the ears, the horses the eyes, the driver the mind. Prâna (breath) mounts that chariot (and on it, i.e. by means of meditating on Prâna, he reaches Hiranyagarbha).

10. This has been said by a Rishi (Rv. X, 39, 12):

11. ‘Come hither on that which is quicker than mind,’ and (Rv. VIII, 73, 2) ‘Come hither on that which is quicker than the twinkling of an eye,’ yea, the twinkling of an eye.

1 Cf. II, 2, 4, 4.

2 The commentator remarks that the worship and meditation on the uktha as prâna, as here taught, is different from the prânavidyâ, the knowledge of prâna, taught in the Khândogya, the Brâhadâranyaka, &c., where prâna or life is represented as the object of meditation, without any reference to the uktha or other portions of the Mahâvrata ceremony. He enjoins that the meditation on the uktha as prāṇa should be continued till the desired result, the identification of the worshipper with prāṇa, is realised, and that it should afterwards be repeated until death, because otherwise the impression might vanish, and the reward of becoming a god, and going to the gods, be lost. Nor is the worship to be confined to the time of the sacrifice, the Mahāvrata, only, but it has to be repeated mentally during life. There are neither certain postures required for it, nor certain times and places. At the time of death, however, he who has become perfect in this meditation on uktha, as the emblem of prāṇa, will have his reward. Up to a certain point his fate will be the same as that of other people. The activity of the senses will be absorbed in the mind, the activity of the mind in breath, breath in the activity of life, life with breath in the five elements, fire, &c., and these five elements will be absorbed up to their seed in the Paramātman or Highest Self. This ends the old birth. But then the subtile body, having been absorbed in the Highest Self, rises again in the lotus of the heart, and passing out by the channel of the head, reaches a ray of the sun, whether by day or by night, and goes at the northern or southern course of the sun to the road of Arāśis or light. That Arāśis, light, and other powers carry him on, and led by these he reaches the Brahma-loka, where he creates to himself every kind of enjoyment, according to his wish. He may create for himself a material body and enjoy all sorts of pleasures, as if in a state of waking, or he may, without such a body, enjoy all pleasures in mind only, as if in a dream. And as he creates these various bodies according to his wish, he creates also living souls in each, endowed with the internal organs of mind, and moves about in them, as he pleases. In fact this world is the same for the devotee (yogin) and for the Highest Self, except that creative power belongs truly to the latter only. At last the devotee gains the highest knowledge, that of the Highest Self in himself, and then, at the dissolution of the Brahma-loka, he obtains complete freedom with Brahman.
FOURTH ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

With this adhyāya begins the real Upanishad, best known under the name of the Aitareya-upanishad, and often separately edited, commented on, and translated. If treated separately, what we call the fourth adhyāya of the second Āranyaka, becomes the first adhyāya of the Upanishad, sometimes also, by counting all adhyāyas from the beginning of the Aitareya-āranyaka, the ninth. The divisions adopted by Sāyana, who explains the Upanishad as part of the Āranyaka, and by Śaṅkara, who explains it independently, vary, though Sāyana states that he follows in his commentary on the Upanishad the earlier commentary of Śaṅkara. I have given the divisions adopted by Sāyana, and have marked those of Śaṅkara’s by figures in parentheses, placed at the end of each paragraph. The difference between this Upanishad and the three preceding adhyāyas is easily perceived. Hitherto the answer to the question, Whence this world? had been, From Prāna, prāna meaning breath and life, which was looked upon for a time as a sufficient explanation of all that is. From a psychological point of view this prāna is the conscious self (pragñātman); in a more mythological form it appears as Hiranyagarbha, ‘the golden germ,’ sometimes even as Indra. It is one of the chief objects of the prānavidyā, or life-knowledge, to show that the living principle in us is the same as the living principle in the sun, and that by a recognition of their identity and of the true nature of prāna, the devotee, or he who has rightly meditated on prāna during his life, enters after death into the world of Hiranyagarbha.

This is well expressed in the Kaushitaki-upanishad III, 2, where Indra says to Pratardana: ‘I am Prāna; meditate on me as the conscious self (pragñātman), as life, as immortality. Life is prāna, prāna is life. Immortality is prāna, prāna is immortality. By prāna he obtains immortality in the other world, by knowledge (pragñā) true conception. Prāna is consciousness (pragñā), consciousness is prāna.’

This, however, though it may have satisfied the mind of the Brahmans for a time, was not a final solution. That final solution of the problem not simply of life, but of existence, is given in the Upanishad which teaches that Aṭman, the Self, and not Prāna, Life, is the last and only cause of everything. In some places this doctrine is laid down in all its simplicity. Our true self, it is said, has its true being in the Highest Self only. In other passages, however, and nearly in the whole of this Upanishad, this simple doctrine is mixed up with much that is mythological, fanciful, and absurd, arthavāda, as the commentators call it, but as it might often be more truly called, anarthavāda, and it is only towards the end that the identity of the self-conscious self with the Highest Self or Brahman is clearly enuntiated.

Adoration to the Highest Self. Hari, Om!

1. Verily, in the beginning ¹ all this was Self, one only; there was nothing else blinking ² whatsoever.

2. He thought: 'Shall I send forth worlds?' (1) He sent forth these worlds,

3. Ambhas (water), Mariśi (light), Mara (mortal), and Ap (water).

4. That Ambhas (water) is above the heaven, and it is heaven, the support. The Mariśis (the lights) are the sky. The Mara (mortal) is the earth, and the waters under the earth are the Ap world ³. (2)

¹ Before the creation. Comm.
² Blinking, mishat, i.e. living; cf. Rv. X, 190, 2, visvasya mishato vasā, the lord of all living. Sāyāja seems to take mishat as a 3rd pers. sing.
³ The names of the four worlds are peculiar. Ambhas means water, and is the name given to the highest world, the waters above the heaven, and heaven itself. Mariśis are rays, here used as a name of the sky, antariksha. Mara means dying, and the earth is called so, because all creatures living there must die. Ap is water, here explained as the waters under the earth. The usual division of the world is threefold, earth, sky, and heaven. Here it is fourfold, the fourth division being the water round the earth, or, as the commentator says, under the earth. Ambhas was probably intended for the highest heaven (dyaus), and was then explained both as what is above the heaven and as heaven itself, the support. If we translate, like Sañkara and Colebrooke, 'the water is the region above the heaven which heaven upholds,' we should lose heaven altogether, yet heaven, as the third with sky and earth, is essential in the Indian view of the world.
5. He thought: 'There are these worlds; shall I send forth guardians of the worlds?'

He then formed the Purusha (the person), taking him forth from the water.

6. He brooded on him, and when that person had thus been brooded on, a mouth burst forth like an egg. From the mouth proceeded speech, from speech Agni (fire).

Nostrils burst forth. From the nostrils proceeded scent (prāna), from scent Vāyu (air).

Eyes burst forth. From the eyes proceeded sight, from sight Āditya (sun).

Ears burst forth. From the ears proceeded hearing, from hearing the Dis (quarters of the world).

Skin burst forth. From the skin proceeded hairs (sense of touch), from the hairs shrubs and trees.

The heart burst forth. From the heart proceeded mind, from mind Kāndramas (moon).

The navel burst forth. From the navel proceeded the Āpāna (the down-breathing), from Āpāna death.

1 Purusha; an embodied being, Colebrooke; a being of human shape, Röer; purushākāram virātpindam, Sāyana.

2 According to the commentator, from the five elements, beginning with water. That person is meant for the Virāg.

3 Tap, as the commentator observes, does not mean here and in similar passages to perform austerities (tapas), such as the Kṛikkta, the Kāndrayana, &c., but to conceive and to will and to create by mere will. I have translated it by brooding, though this expresses a part only of the meaning expressed by tap.

4 Literally, was opened.

5 Three things are always distinguished here—the place of each sense, the instrument of the sense, and the presiding deity of the sense.

6 Prāna, i.e. ghrānendriya, must be distinguished from the prāna, the up-breathing, one of the five prānas, and likewise from the prāna as the principle of life.

7 The Āpāna, down-breathing, is generally one of the five vital airs
The generative organ burst forth. From the organ proceeded seed, from seed water. (4)

SECOND KHANDA.

1. Those deities (devatâ), Agni and the rest, after they had been sent forth, fell into this great ocean. Then he (the Self) besieged him, (the person) with hunger and thirst.

2. The deities then (tormented by hunger and thirst) spoke to him (the Self): 'Allow us a place in which we may rest and eat food.' (1)

   He led a cow towards them (the deities). They said: 'This is not enough.' He led a horse towards them. They said: 'This is not enough.' (2)

   He led man towards them. Then they said: 'Well done, indeed.' Therefore man is well done.

3. He said to them: 'Enter, each according to his place.' (3)

4. Then Agni (fire), having become speech, entered the mouth. Vâyu (air), having become scent, entered the nostrils. Âditya (sun), having become sight, entered the eyes. The Dis (regions), having become hearing, entered the ears. The shrubs and trees, having become hairs, entered the skin. Kan- dramasas (the moon), having become mind, entered which are supposed to keep the body alive. In our place, however, apâna is deglutition and digestion, as we shall see in II, 4, 3, 10.

1 They fell back into that universal being from whence they had sprung, the first created person, the Virâg. Or they fell into the world, the last cause of which is ignorance.

2 To eat food is explained to mean to perceive the objects which correspond to the senses, presided over by the various deities.

3 Here purusha is different from the first purusha, the universal person. It can only be intended for intelligent man.

4 Sukrîta, well done, virtue; or, if taken for svakrîta, self-made.
the heart. Death, having become down-breathing, entered the navel. The waters, having become seed, entered the generative organ. (4)

5. Then Hunger and Thirst spoke to him (the Self): 'Allow us two (a place).' He said to them: 'I assign you to those very deities there, I make you co-partners with them.' Therefore to whatever deity an oblation is offered, hunger and thirst are co-partners in it. (5)

THIRD KHANDA.

1. He thought: 'There are these worlds and the guardians of the worlds. Let me send forth food for them.' (1)

He brooded over the water. From the water thus brooded on, matter (mûrti) was born. And that matter which was born, that verily was food. (2)

2. When this food (the object matter) had thus been sent forth, it wished to flee, crying and turning away. He (the subject) tried to grasp it by speech. He could not grasp it by speech. If he had grasped it by speech, man would be satisfied by naming food. (3)

He tried to grasp it by scent (breath). He could not grasp it by scent. If he had grasped it by scent, man would be satisfied by smelling food. (4)

He tried to grasp it by the eye. He could not

---

1 The water, as mentioned before, or the five elements.
2 Mûrti, for mûrti, form, Colebrooke; a being of organised form, Röer; vrîhiyavâdirûpa mûshakâdirûpa ka mûrtih, i.e. vegetable food for men, animal food for cats, &c.
3 Offered food, i.e. objects for the Devatâs and the senses in the body.
4 Atyagîghânsat, aitrayena hantum gamunum aikhat. Sâyana.
grasp it by the eye. If he had grasped it by the eye, man would be satisfied by seeing food. (5)

He tried to grasp it by the ear. He could not grasp it by the ear. If he had grasped it by the ear, man would be satisfied by hearing food. (6)

He tried to grasp it by the skin. He could not grasp it by the skin. If he had grasped it by the skin, man would be satisfied by touching food. (7)

He tried to grasp it by the mind. He could not grasp it by the mind. If he had grasped it by the mind, man would be satisfied by thinking food. (8)

He tried to grasp it by the generative organ. He could not grasp it by the organ. If he had grasped it by the organ, man would be satisfied by sending forth food. (9)

He tried to grasp it by the down-breathing (the breath which helps to swallow food through the mouth and to carry it off through the rectum, the pâyvindriya). He got it.

3. Thus it is Vâyu (the getter) who lays hold of food, and the Vâyu is verily Annâyu (he who gives life or who lives by food). (10)

4. He thought: 'How can all this be without me?'

5. And then he thought: 'By what way shall I get there?'

6. And then he thought: 'If speech names, if scent smells, if the eye sees, if the ear hears, if the skin feels, if the mind thinks, if the off-breathing digests, if the organ sends forth, then what am I?' (11)

1 An attempt to derive vâyu from vi, to get.

2 Or, by which of the two ways shall I get in, the one way being from the top of the foot (cf. Ait. Âr. II, 1, 4, 1), the other from the skull? Comm.
7. Then opening the suture of the skull, he got in by that door.

8. That door is called the Vidrīti (tearing asunder), the Nāndana (the place of bliss).

9. There are three dwelling-places for him, three dreams; this dwelling-place (the eye), this dwelling-place (the throat), this dwelling-place (the heart)\(^1\). (12)

10. When born (when the Highest Self had entered the body) he looked through all things, in order to see whether anything wished to proclaim here another (Self). He saw this person only (himself) as the widely spread Brahman. ‘I saw it,’ thus he said\(^2\); (13)

Therefore he was Idam-dra (seeing this).

11. Being Idamdra by name, they call him Indra mysteriously. For the Devas love mystery, yea, they love mystery. (14)

---

\(^1\) Passages like this must always have required an oral interpretation, but it is by no means certain that the explanation given in the commentaries represents really the old traditional interpretation. Sāyava explains the three dwelling-places as the right eye, in a state of waking; as the throat, in a state of dreaming; as the heart, in a state of profound sleep. Saṅkara explains them as the right eye, the inner mind, and the ether in the heart. Sāyavā allows another interpretation of the three dwelling-places being the body of the father, the body of the mother, and one’s own body. The three dreams or sleeps he explains by waking, dreaming, and profound sleep, and he remarks that waking too is called a dream as compared with the true awakening, which is the knowledge of Brahman. In the last sentence the speaker, when repeating three times ‘this dwelling-place,’ is supposed to point to his right eye, the throat, and the heart. This interpretation is supported by a passage in the Brahma-UPANISHAD, Netre gāgaritam vidyāt kanthe svapnam samādiset, sushuptam hridayasya tu.

\(^2\) In this passage, which is very obscure, Saṅkara fails us, either because, as Ānandaṅgāna says, he thought the text was too easy to require any explanation, or because the writers of the MSS. left out
FIFTH ADHYÂYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Let the women who are with child move away!
2. Verily, from the beginning he (the self) is in man as a germ, which is called seed.
3. This (seed), which is strength gathered from all the limbs of the body, he (the man) bears as self in his self (body). When he commits the seed to the woman, then he (the father) causes it to be born. That is his first birth. (1)
4. That seed becomes the self of the woman, as the passage. Ānandagāṇāna explains: 'He looked through all creatures, he identified himself with them, and thought he was a man, blind, happy, &c.; or, as it is elsewhere expressed, he developed forms and names. And how did this mistake arise? Because he did not see the other, the true Self;’ or literally, ‘Did he see the other Self?’ which is only a figure of speech to convey the meaning that he did not see it. The particle iti is then to be taken in a causal sense, (i.e. he did so, because what else could he have wished to proclaim?) But he allows another explanation, viz. ‘He considered all beings, whether they existed by themselves or not, and after having considered, he arrived at the conclusion, What shall I call different from the true Self?’ The real difficulties, however, are not removed by these explanations. First of all, we expect vāvadisham before iti, and secondly, unless anyam refers to ātmānam, we expect anyad. My own translation is literal, but I am not certain that it conveys the true meaning. One might understand it as implying that the Self looked about through all things, in order to find out, ‘What does wish to proclaim here another Self?’ And when he saw there was nothing which did not come from himself, then he recognised that the Purusha, the person he had sent forth, or, as we should say, the person he had created, was the developed Brahman, was the Ātman, was himself. Sāyāna explains vāvadishat by vādisyāmi, but before iti the third person cannot well refer to the subject of vyaikshat.

1 Some MSS. begin this adhyāya with the sentence apakrāmantu garbhiniyah, may the women who are with child walk away! It is counted as a paragraph.
if one of her own limbs. Therefore it does not injure her.

5. She nourishes his (her husband’s) self (the son) within her. (2) She who nourishes, is to be nourished.

6. The woman bears the germ. He (the father) elevates the child even before the birth, and immediately after ¹.

7. When he thus elevates the child both before and after his birth, he really elevates his own self,

8. For the continuation of these worlds (men).
For thus are these worlds continued.

9. This is his second birth. (3)

10. He (the son), being his self, is then placed in his stead for (the performance of) all good works.

11. But his other self (the father), having done all he has to do, and having reached the full measure of his life, departs.

12. And departing from hence he is born again.
That is his third birth.

13. And this has been declared by a Rishi (Rv.
IV, 27, 1): (4)

14. ‘While dwelling in the womb, I discovered all the births of these Devas. A hundred iron strongholds kept me, but I escaped quickly down like a falcon.’

15. Vâmadeva, lying in the womb, has thus declaimed this. (5)

And having this knowledge he stepped forth, after this dissolution of the body, and having obtained all his desires in that heavenly world, became immortal, yea, he became immortal. (6)

¹ By nourishing the mother, and by performing certain ceremonies both before and after the birth of a child.
SIXTH ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Let the women go back to their place.
2. Who is he whom we meditate on as the Self? Which is the Self?
3. That by which we see (form), that by which we hear (sound), that by which we perceive smells, that by which we utter speech, that by which we distinguish sweet and not sweet, (1) and what comes from the heart and the mind, namely, perception, command, understanding, knowledge, wisdom, seeing, holding, thinking, considering, readiness (or suffering), remembering, conceiving, willing, breathing, loving, desiring?
4. No, all these are various names only of knowledge (the true Self). (2)
5. And that Self, consisting of (knowledge), is Brahman (m.) (3), it is Indra, it is Pragâpati (4). All these Devas, these five great elements, earth, air, ether, water, fire, these and those which are, as it were, small and mixed (5), and seeds of this kind and that kind, born from eggs, born from the womb, born from heat, born from germs (6), horses, cows, men, elephants, and whatsoever breathes, whether walking or flying, and what is immoveable—all that is led (produced) by knowledge (the Self).
6. It rests on knowledge (the Self). The world

1 I read ko yam instead of ko 'yam.
2 Or, Which of the two, the real or the phenomenal, the nirupādhika or sopādhika?
3 Hiranyagarbha. Comm.
4 Virāg. Comm.
5 Serpents, &c., says the commentary.
6 Cf. Kṣ. Up. VI, 3, 1, where the sveda, born from heat or perspiration, are not mentioned.
is led (produced) by knowledge (the Self). Knowledge is its cause\(^1\).

7. Knowledge is Brahman. (3)

8. He (Vāmadeva), having by this conscious self stepped forth from this world, and having obtained all desires in that heavenly world, became immortal, yea, he became immortal. Thus it is, Om. (4)

SEVENTH ADHYĀYA\(^2\).

FIRST KHANDA.

1. My speech rests in the mind, my mind rests in speech\(^3\). Appear to me (thou, the Highest Self)! You (speech and mind) are the two pins\(^4\) (that hold the wheels) of the Veda. May what I have learnt not forsake me\(^5\). I join day and night with what I have learnt\(^6\). I shall speak of the real, I shall speak the true. May this protect me, may this protect the teacher! May it protect me, may it protect the teacher, yea, the teacher!

---

1 We have no words to distinguish between pragnā, state of knowing, and pragnāna, act of knowing. Both are names of the Highest Brahman, which is the beginning and end (pratishṭhā) of everything that exists or seems to exist.

2 This seventh adhyāya contains a propitiatory prayer (sāntikaro mantrabh). It is frequently left out in the MSS. which contain the Aitareya-upanishad with Saṅkara’s commentary, and Dr. Röer has omitted it in his edition. Sāyana explains it in his commentary on the Aitareya-āranyaka; and in one MS. of Saṅkara’s commentary on the Aitareya-upanishad, which is in my possession, the seventh adhyāya is added with the commentary of Mādhavamātya, the Āgnāpālaka of Virabukka-mahārāga.

3 The two depend on each other.

4 Ånī, explained by the commentator as ānayanasamartha.

6 I repeat it day and night so that I may not forget it.
THIRD ĀRAṆYAKA

FIRST ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. Next follows the Upanishad of the Samhitā.
2. The former half is the earth, the latter half the heaven, their union the air, thus says Māndukeya; their union is the ether, thus did Mākshavya teach it.
3. That air is not considered independent, therefore I do not agree with his (Manḍūka's) son.
4. Verily, the two are the same, therefore air is

---

1 This last portion of the Upanishad is found in the MS. discovered by Dr. Bühler in Kashmir, and described by him in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1877, p. 36. I have collated it, so far as it was possible to read it, many lines being either broken off altogether, or almost entirely obliterated.

2 Samhitā is the sacred text in which all letters are closely joined. The joining together of two letters is called their samhitā; the first letter of a joined group the pūrvarūpa (n.), the second the uttararūpa. For instance, in agnim the m is pūrvarūpa, the ō uttararūpa, and mī their samhitā or union.

3 As in worshipping the Śālagrāma stone, we really worship Vishnu, so we ought to perceive the earth, the heaven, and the air when we pronounce the first and the second letters of a group, and that group itself.

4 Mene has here been taken as 3rd pers. sing. perf. passive. The commentator, however, explains it as an active verb, niskritavān.

5 Because it is included in the ether, not the ether in the air. Comm.
considered independent, thus says Agastya. For it is the same, whether they say air or ether.

5. So far with reference to deities (mythologically); now with reference to the body (physiologically):

6. The former half is speech, the latter half is mind, their union breath (prâna), thus says Sûravîra Mândukeya.

7. But his eldest son said: The former half is mind, the latter half speech. For we first conceive with the mind indeed, and then we utter with speech. Therefore the former half is indeed mind, the latter half speech, but their union is really breath.

8. Verily, it is the same with both, the father (Mândukeya) and the son.

9. This (meditation as here described), joined with mind, speech, and breath, is (like) a chariot drawn by two horses and one horse between them (prashêtivâhana).

10. And he who thus knows this union, becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

11. Now all this comes from the Mândukeyas.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. Next comes the meditation as taught by Sâkalya.

---

1 Both views are tenable, for it is not the actual air and ether which are meditated on, but their names, as declared and explained in this peculiar act of worship. We should read âkâsasketi, a reading confirmed both by the commentary and by the Kashmir MS.

2 The man among heroes. Comm.

3 The Kashmir MS. reads manasaivâgre.

4 Both views are admissible. Comm.

5 Prânasamhitâh, Kashmir MS.
2. The first half is the earth, the second half heaven, their uniting the rain, the uniter Parganya.
3. And so it is when he (Parganya) rains thus strongly, without ceasing, day and night;
4. Then they say also (in ordinary language), 'Heaven and earth have come together.'
5. So much with regard to the deities; now with regard to the body:
6. Every man is indeed like an egg. There are two halves (of him), thus they say: 'This half is the earth, that half heaven.' And there between them is the ether (the space of the mouth), like the ether between heaven and earth. In this ether there (in the mouth) the breath is fixed, as in that other ether the air is fixed. And as there are those three luminaries (in heaven), there are these three luminaries in man.
7. As there is that sun in heaven, there is this eye in the head. As there is that lightning in the sky, there is this heart in the body; as there is that fire on earth, there is this seed in the member.
8. Having thus represented the self (body) as the whole world, Sākalya said: This half is the earth, that half heaven.
9. He who thus knows this union, becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of coun-

1 If i is followed by a, the i is changed to y, and both are united as ya. Here a is the cause which changes i into y. Thus Parganya, the god of rain, is the cause which unites earth and heaven into rain. Comm.
2 When it rains incessantly, heaven and earth seem to be one in rain.
4 The one half from the feet to the lower jaw, the other half from the upper jaw to the skull. Comm.
tenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

Third Khanda 1.

1. Next come the reciters of the Nirbhuga 2.

2. Nirbhuga abides on earth, Pratrinna in heaven, the Ubhayamantarena in the sky.

3. Now, if any one should chide him who recites the Nirbhuga, let him answer: 'Thou art fallen from the two lower places 3.' If any one should chide him who recites the Pratrinna, let him answer: 'Thou art fallen from the two higher places 4.' But he who recites the Ubhayamantarena, there is no chiding him.

4. For when he turns out the Sandhi (the union of words), that is the form of Nirbhuga 5; and when he pronounces two syllables pure (without modification), that is the form of Pratrinna 6. This comes

---

1 Cf. Rig-veda-pràtisàkhya, ed. Max Müller, p. iii, and Nachträge, p. ii.

2 Nirbhuga(n) is the recitation of the Veda without intervals, therefore the same as Samhità. Pratrinna is the recitation of each word by itself (pada-pàtha); Ubhayamantarena, the between the two, is the intertwining of Samhità and Pada-pàtha, the so-called Krama-pàtha. By reciting the Samhità inattentively, one may use forms which belong to the Pada-text; and by reciting the Pada inattentively, one may use forms which belong to the Samhità-text. But in reciting the Krama both the Samhità and Pada forms are used together, and therefore mistakes are less likely to happen.

4 From the sky and from heaven.

5 Nirbhuga may mean without arms, as if the arms of the words were taken away, or with two arms stretched out, the two words forming, as it were, two arms to one body.

6 Pratrinna means cut asunder, every word being separated from the others.
first\textsuperscript{1}. By the Udbhayamantara (what is between the two) both are fulfilled (both the sandhi and the pada).

5. Let him who wishes for proper food say the Nirbhuga; let him who wishes for Svarga, say the Pratrr\textit{nna}; let him who wishes for both say the Udbhayamantare\textit{n}\textsubscript{a}.

6. Now if another man (an enemy) should chide him who says the Nirbhuga, let him say to him: ‘Thou hast offended the earth, the deity; the earth, the deity, will strike thee.’

If another man should chide him who says the Pratrr\textit{nna}, let him say to him: ‘Thou hast offended heaven, the deity; heaven, the deity, will strike thee.’

If another man should chide him who says the Udbhayamantare\textit{n}\textsubscript{a}, let him say to him: ‘Thou hast offended the sky, the deity; the sky, the deity, will strike thee.’

7. And whatever the reciter shall say to one who speaks to him or does not speak to him, depend upon it, it will come to pass.

8. But to a Brâhma\textit{n}\textsubscript{a} let him not say anything except what is auspicious.

9. Only he may curse a Brâhma\textit{n}\textsubscript{a} in excessive wealth \textsuperscript{2}.

10. Nay, not even in excessive wealth should he curse a Brâhma\textit{n}\textsubscript{a}, but he should say, ‘I bow before Brâhmanas,’—thus says Sùravîra Mân\textit{d}ûkeya.

\textsuperscript{1} The words were first each separate, before they were united according to the laws of Sandhi.

\textsuperscript{2} He may curse him, if he is exceeding rich; or he may wish him the curse of excessive wealth; or he may curse him, if something great depends on it.
FOURTH KHANDA.

1. Next follow the imprecations\(^1\).

2. Let him know that breath\(^2\) is the beam (on which the whole house of the body rests).

3. If any one (a Brâhmana or another man) should chide him, who by meditation has become that breath as beam\(^3\), then, if he thinks himself strong, he says: 'I grasped the breath, the beam, well; thou dost not prevail against me who have grasped the breath as the beam.' Let him say to him: 'Breath, the beam, will forsake thee.'

4. But if he thinks himself not strong, let him say to him: 'Thou couldst not grasp him who wishes to grasp the breath as the beam. Breath, the beam, will forsake thee.'

5. And whatever the reciter shall say to one who speaks to him or does not speak to him, depend upon it, it will come to pass. But to a Brâhmana let him not say anything except what is auspicious. Only he may curse a Brâhmana in excessive wealth. Nay, not even in excessive wealth should he curse a Brâhmana, but he should say, 'I bow before Brâhmans,'—thus says Sûravîra Mândûkeya.

---

\(^1\) The commentator explains anuvāhâra, not as imprecations, but as referring to those who teach or use the imprecations, such imprecations being necessary to guard against the loss of the benefits accruing from the meditation and worship here described; such teachers say what follows.

\(^2\) Breath, the union of mind and speech, as explained before. This is the opinion of Sthavira Sâkalya, cf. III, 2, 1, 1.

\(^3\) If he should tell him that he did not meditate on breath properly.
FIFTH KHANDA.

1. Now those who repeat the Nirbhūga say:
2. 'The former half is the first syllable, the latter half the second syllable, and the space between the first and second halves is the Samhitā (union).'
3. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

4. Now Hrasva Māṇḍūkeya says: 'We reciters of Nirbhūga say, "Yes, the former half is the first syllable, and the latter half the second syllable, but the Samhitā is the space between the first and second halves in so far as by it one turns out the union (sandhi), and knows what is the accent and what is not, and distinguishes what is the mora and what is not."

5. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

6. Now his middle son, the child of his mother Pratibodhi, says: 'One pronounces these two syllables letter by letter, without entirely separating

---

1 As spoken of before, III, 1, 1, 1.
2 In agnim ī/e, ī/e by itself has no accent, but as joined by sandhi with agnim, its first syllable becomes svarita, its second praṅita. In tava it, the vowel ī is a short mora or mātrā; but if joined with va, it vanishes, and becomes long e, tavit. Comm.
3 Pratibodhiputra, the son of Pratibodhi, she being probably one out of several wives of Hrasva. Another instance of this metronymic nomenclature occurred in Krishna Devakiputra, Kh. Up. III, 7, 6. The Kashmir MS. reads Prāṅibodhi, but Pratibodha is a recognised name in Gauḍa Vidādi, and the right reading is probably Pratibodhi. The same MS. leaves out putra āha.
them, and without entirely uniting them. Then that mora between the first and second halves, which indicates the union, that is the Sāman (evenness, sliding). I therefore hold Sāman only to be the Samhitā (union).

7. This has also been declared by a Rishi (Rv. II, 23, 16):—

8. 'O Brihaspati, they know nothing higher than Sāman.'

9. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

Sixth Khandā.

1. Târukshya said: 'The Samhitā (union) is formed by means of the Brihat and Rathantara Sāmans.'

2. Verily, the Rathantara Sāman is speech, the Brihat Sāman is breath. By both, by speech and breath, the Samhitā is formed.

3. For this Upanishad (for acquiring from his teacher the knowledge of this Samhitā of speech and breath) Târukshya guards (his teacher's) cows a whole year.

4. For it alone Târukshya guards the cows a whole year.

1 So that the ë in tavet should neither be one letter e, nor two letters a+i, but something between the two, enabling us to hear a+i in the pronunciation of ë.

2 The Kashmir MS. reads Tarkshva, a name used before as the title of a hymn (Ait. Âr. I, 5, 2, 8). Here Târukshya seems preferable, see Pân. IV, 1, 105.

3 See Ait. Âr. I, 4, 2, 1-4.

4 These two, the Brihat and Rathantara, are required for the Prishtâstotra in the Agnishṭoma, and they are to remind the worshipper that speech and breath are required for all actions.
5. This has also been declared by a Rishi (Rv. X, 181, 1; and Rv. X, 181, 2):—
6. 'Vasishtha carried hither the Rathantara;'
   'Bharadvāga brought hither the Brihat of Agni.'
7. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.
8. Kauṭhūrapavya said: 'Speech is united with breath, breath with the blowing air, the blowing air with the Visvedevas, the Visvedevas with the heavenly world, the heavenly world with Brahman.
   That Samhitā is called the gradual Samhitā.'
9. He who knows this gradual Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga, in exactly the same manner as this Samhitā, i.e. gradually.
10. If that worshipper, whether for his own sake or for that of another, recites (the Samhitā), let him know when he is going to recite, that this Samhitā went up to heaven, and that it will be even so with those who by knowing it become Devas. May it always be so!
11. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives
    his full age.
12. Paṅkālakanda said: 'The Samhitā (union, composition) is speech.'
13. Verily, by speech the Vedas, by speech the metres are composed. Friends unite through speech, all beings unite through speech; therefore speech is everything here¹.

¹ Everything can be obtained by speech in this life and in the next. Comm.
14. With regard to this (view of speech being more than breath), it should be borne in mind that when we thus repeat (the Veda) or speak, breath is (absorbed) in speech; speech swallows breath. And when we are silent or sleep, speech is (absorbed) in breath; breath swallows speech. The two swallow each other. Verily, speech is the mother, breath the son.

15. This has been declared also by a Ṛishi (Rv. X, 114, 4):—

16. 'There is one bird; (as wind) he has entered the sky; (as breath or living soul) he saw this whole world. With my ripe mind I saw him close to me (in the heart); the mother (licks or) absorbs him (breath), and he absorbs the mother (speech).'

17. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.

18. Next follows the Pragâpati-Samhitā.

19. The former half is the wife, the latter half the man; the result of their union the son; the act of their union the begetting; that Samhitā is Aditi (indestructible).

20. For Aditi (indestructible) is all this whatever there is, father, mother, son, and begetting.

21. This has also been declared by a Ṛishi (Rv. I, 189, 10):—

22. 'Aditi is mother, is father, is son.'

23. He who thus knows this Samhitā (union), becomes united with offspring, cattle, fame, glory of countenance, and the world of Svarga. He lives his full age.
SECOND ADHYĀYA.

FIRST KHANDE.

1. Sthavira Sākalya said that breath is the beam, and as the other beams rest on the house-beam, thus the eye, the ear, the mind, the speech, the senses, the body, the whole self rests on this breath.

2. Of that self the breathing is like the sibilants, the bones like the mutes, the marrow like the vowels, and the fourth part, flesh, blood, and the rest, like the semivowels,—so said Hrasva Mândûkeya.

3. To us it was said to be a triad only.

4. Of that triad, viz. bones, marrow, and joints, there are 360 (parts) on this side (the right), and 360 on that side (the left). They make 720 together, and 720 are the days and nights of the year. Thus that self which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech is like unto the days.

5. He who thus knows this self, which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech, as like unto the days, obtains union, likeness, or nearness with the days, has sons and cattle, and lives his full age.
Second Khanda.

1. Next comes Kauntharavya:

2. There are 360 syllables (vowels), 360 sibilants (consonants), 360 groups.

3. What we called syllables are the days, what we called sibilants are the nights, what we called groups are the junctions of days and nights. So far with regard to the gods (the days).

4. Now with regard to the body. The syllables which we explained mythologically, are physiologically the bones; the sibilants which we explained mythologically, are physiologically the marrow.

5. Marrow is the real breath (life), for marrow is seed, and without breath (life) seed is not sown. Or when it is sown without breath (life), it will decay, it will not grow.

6. The groups which we explained mythologically, are physiologically the joints.

7. Of that triad, viz. bones, marrow, and joints, there are 540 (parts) on this side (the right), and 540 on that side (the left). They make 1080 together, and 1080 are the rays of the sun. They make the Brñihatì verses and the day (of the Mahåvrata)\(^1\).

8. Thus that self which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech is like unto the syllables.

9. He who knows this self which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech, as like unto syllables, obtains union, likeness, or nearness with the syllables, has sons and cattle, and lives his full age.

\(^1\) There are in the Mahåvrata eighty tristichs of Brñihatìs, and as each Brñihatì is decreed to consist of thirty-six syllables, ten would give 360 syllables, and three times ten, 1080. Comm.
THIRD KHANDA.

1. Bādhva¹ says, there are four persons (to be meditated on and worshipped).

2. The person of the body, the person of the metres, the person of the Veda, and the Great person.

3. What we call the person of the body is this corporeal self. Its essence is the incorporeal conscious self.

4. What we call the person of the metres is this collection of letters (the Veda). Its essence is the vowel a.

5. What we call the person of the Veda is (the mind) by which we know the Vedas, the Rig-veda, Yajur-veda, and Sama-veda. Its essence is Brahman² (m.)

6. Therefore let one chose a Brahman-priest who is full of Brahman (the Veda), and is able to see any flaw in the sacrifice.

7. What we call the Great person is the year, which causes some beings to fall together, and causes others to grow up. Its essence is yonder sun.

8. One should know that the incorporeal conscious self and yonder sun are both one and the same. Therefore the sun appears to every man singly (and differently).

9. This has also been declared by a Rishi (Rv. I, 115, 1):

10. ‘The bright face of the gods arose, the eye of Mitra, Varuna, and Agni; it filled heaven and earth

¹ Instead of Bādhya, the commentary and the Kashmir MS. read Bādhva.
² Hiranyagarbha, with whom he who knows the Veda becomes identified. Comm. and the sky,—the sun is the self of all that rests and moves.'

11. 'This I think to be the regular Samhitâ as conceived by me,' thus said Bâdhva.

12. For the Bahvrikas consider him (the self) in the great hymn (mahad uktha), the Adhvaryus in the sacrificial fire, the Khandogas in the Mahâvrata ceremony. Him they see in this earth, in heaven, in the air, in the ether, in the water, in herbs, in trees, in the moon, in the stars, in all beings. Him alone they call Brahman.

13. That self which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech is like unto the year.

14. He who recites to another that self which consists of sight, hearing, metre, mind, and speech, and is like unto the year,

FOURTH KHANDA.

1. To him the Vedas yield no more milk, he has no luck in what he has learnt (from his Guru); he does not know the path of virtue.

2. This has also been declared by a Rishi (Rv. X, 71, 6):—

3. 'He who has forsaken the friend (the Veda), that knows his friends, in his speech there is no luck. Though he hears, he hears in vain, for he does not know the path of virtue.'

4. Here it is clearly said that he has no luck in what he has learnt, and that he does not know the path of virtue.

5. Therefore let no one who knows this, lay the sacrificial fire (belonging to the Mahâvrata) for another, let him not sing the Sámans of the Mahâvrata for another, let him not recite the Sastras of that day for another.

6. However, let him willingly do this for a father or for an Ṛkārya; for that is done really for himself.

7. We have said that the incorporeal conscious self and the sun are one. When these two become separated, the sun is seen as if it were the moon; no rays spring from it; the sky is red like madder; the patient cannot retain the wind, his head smells bad like a raven's nest:—let him know then that his self (in the body) is gone, and that he will not live very long.

8. Then whatever he thinks he has to do, let him do it, and let him recite the following hymns: Yad anti yaka dūrake (Rv. IX, 67, 21-27); Ād it pratnasya retasaḥ (Rv. VIII, 6, 30); Yatra brahmā pavamāna (Rv. IX, 113, 6-11); Ud vayam tamasas pari (Rv. I, 50, 10).

9. Next, when the sun is seen pierced, and seems like the nave of a cart-wheel, when he sees his own shadow pierced, let him know then that it is so (as stated before, i.e. that he is going to die soon).

10. Next, when he sees himself in a mirror or in the water with a crooked head, or without a head, or when his pupils are seen inverted or not straight, let him know then that it is so.

1 Ait. Ār. III, 2, 3, 8.
2 This separation of the self of the sun and the conscious self within us is taken as a sign of approaching death, and therefore a number of premonitory symptoms are considered in this place.
3 ἡλιος μινοειδής, Xen. Hist. gr. 4, 3, 10.
4 The Kashmir MS. reads gīvayishyati.
5 The Kashmir MS. reads gihmasirasam vāsariram ātmānam.
6 A white pupil in a black eye-ball. Comm.
11. Next, let him cover his eyes and watch, then threads are seen as if falling together¹. But if he does not see them, let him know then that it is so.

12. Next, let him cover his ears and listen, and there will be a sound as if of a burning fire or of a carriage². But if he does not hear it, let him know then that it is so.

13. Next, when fire looks blue like the neck of a peacock³, or when he sees lightning in a cloudless sky, or no lightning in a clouded sky, or when he sees as it were bright rays in a dark cloud, let him know then that it is so.

14. Next, when he sees the ground as if it were burning, let him know that it is so.

15. These are the visible signs (from 7–14).

16. Next come the dreams⁴.

17. If he sees a black man with black teeth, and that man kills him; or a boar kills him; a monkey jumps on⁵ him; the wind carries him along quickly; having swallowed gold he spits it out⁶; he eats honey; he chews stalks; he carries a red lotus; he drives with asses and boars; wearing a wreath of red flowers (naladas) he drives a black cow with a black calf, facing the south⁷,

18. If a man sees any one of these (dreams), let

¹ The Kashmir MS. reads baširakāni sampatantīva.
² See Kh. Up. III, 13, 8. The Kashmir MS. and the commentary give the words rathasyevopabdis, which are left out in the printed text.
³ The Kashmir MS. reads mayūragrīvā ameghe.
⁴ The Kashmir MS. reads svapnah.
⁵ The Kashmir MS. reads āskandatī.
⁶ The Kashmir MS. reads avagirati.
⁷ The commentator separates the last dream, so as to bring their number to ten.
him fast, and cook a pot of milk, sacrifice it, accompanying each oblation with a verse of the Rātri hymn (Rv. X, 127), and then, after having fed the Brāhmaṇas, with other food (prepared at his house) eat himself the (rest of the) oblation.

19. Let him know that the person within all beings, not heard here\(^1\), not reached, not thought, not subdued, not seen, not understood, not classed, but hearing, thinking, seeing, classing, sounding, understanding, knowing, is his Self.

Fifth Khanda\(^2\).

1. Now next the Upanishad of the whole speech. True all these are Upanishads of the whole speech, but this they call so (chiefly).

2. The mute consonants represent the earth, the sibilants the sky, the vowels heaven.

   The mute consonants represent Agni (fire), the sibilants air, the vowels the sun.

   The mute consonants represent the Ṛig-veda, the sibilants the Yajur-veda, the vowels the Sāma-veda.

   The mute consonants represent the eye, the sibilants the ear, the vowels the mind.

   The mute consonants represent the up-breathing, the sibilants the down-breathing, the vowels the back-breathing.

3. Next comes this divine lute (the human body, made by the gods). The lute made by man is an imitation of it.

4. As there is a head of this, so there is a head of that (lute, made by man). As there is a stomach

---

\(^1\) The Kashmir MS. reads sa yatas sruto.

\(^2\) After having inserted the preceding chapter on omina and the concluding paragraph on the highest knowledge, he now returns to the meditation on the letters.
of this, so there is the cavity\(^1\) (in the board) of that. As there is a tongue of this, so there is a tongue\(^2\) in that. As there are fingers of this, so there are strings of that\(^3\). As there are vowels of this, so there are tones of that. As there are consonants of this, so there are touches of that. As this is endowed with sound and firmly strung, so is that endowed with sound and firmly strung. As this is covered with a hairy skin, so that is covered with a hairy skin.

5. Verily, in former times they covered a lute with a hairy skin.

6. He who knows this lute made by the Devas (and meditates on it), is willingly listened to, his glory fills the earth, and wherever they speak Âryan languages, there they know him.

7. Next follows the verse, called vâgrasa, the essence of speech. When a man reciting or speaking in an assembly does not please, let him say this verse:

8. 'May the queen of all speech, who is covered, as it were, by the lips, surrounded by teeth, as if by spears, who is a thunderbolt, help me to speak well.' This is the vâgrasa, the essence of speech.

Sixth KhandA.

1. Next KrishnaHarita\(^4\) confided this Brâhmaṇa\(^5\) concerning speech to him (his pupil):

---

1 The Kashmir MS. reads udara evam, &c.
2 Vâdanam, what makes the instrument speak, hastena. Comm.
3 Here the order is inverted in the text.
4 One of the sons of Harita, who was dark. Comm.
5 Brâhmaṇa, in the sense of Upanishad, this secret doctrine or explanation. It forms an appendix, like the svishakrit at the end of a sacrifice. 'Iva,' which the commentator explains as restrictive or useless, may mean, something like a Brâhmaṇa.
2. Pragâpati, the year, after having sent forth all creatures, burst. He put himself together again by means of khandas (Vedas). Because he put himself together again by means of khandas, therefore (the text of the Veda) is called Samhitâ (put together).

3. Of that Samhitâ the letter n is the strength, the letter sh the breath and self (âtman).

4. He who knows the Rîk verses and the letters n and sh for every Samhitâ, he knows the Samhitâ with strength and breath. Let him know that this is the life of the Samhitâ.

5. If the pupil asks, 'Shall I say it with the letter n or without it?' let the teacher say, 'With the letter n.' And if he asks, 'Shall I say it with the letter sh or without it?' let the teacher say, 'With the letter sh.'

6. Hrasva Mândûkeya said: 'If we here recite the verses according to the Samhitâ (attending to the necessary changes of n and s into n and sh), and if we say the adhyâya of Mândûkeya (Ait. Âr. III, 1), then the letters n and sh (strength and breath) have by this been obtained for us.'

7. Sthavira Sâkalya said: 'If we recite the verses according to the Samhitâ, and if we say the adhyâya of Mândûkeya, then the letters n and sh have by this been obtained for us.'

8. Here the Rishis, the Kâvasheyas, knowing

---

1 The letters n and sh refer most likely to the rules of natva and shatva, i.e. the changing of n and s into n and sh.

2 If we know whenever n and s should be changed to n and sh in the Samhitâ.

3 The Kâvasheyas said that, after they had arrived at the highest knowledge of Brahman (through the various forms of meditation and worship that lead to it and that have been described in the Upanishad) no further meditation and no further sacrifice could be this, said: 'Why should we repeat (the Veda), why should we sacrifice? We offer as a sacrifice breath in speech, or speech in breath. What is the beginning (of one), that is the end (of the other).'

9. Let no one tell these Samhitâs (Ait. Âr. III, i–III, 2) to one who is not a resident pupil, who has not been with his teacher at least one year, and who is not himself to become an instructor. Thus say the teachers, yea, thus say the teachers.

required. Instead of the morning and evening stoma they offer breath in speech, whenever they speak, or speech in breath, when they are silent or asleep. When speech begins, breathing ceases; when breathing begins, speech ceases.

1 The strict prohibition uttered at the end of the third Âranyaka, not to divulge a knowledge of the Samhitâ–upanishad (Ait. Âr. III, i–2), as here explained, is peculiar. It would have seemed self-evident that, like the rest of the sruti or sacred literature, the Âranyaka too, and every portion of it, could have been learnt from the mouth of a teacher only, and according to rule (niyamena), i.e. by a pupil performing all the duties of a student (brahmaśârin?), so that no one except a regular pupil (antevasin) could possibly gain access to it. Nor can there be any doubt that we ought to take the words asamvatsaravâsin and apravaktre as limitations, and to translate, 'Let no one tell these Samhitâs to any pupil who has not at least been a year with his master, and who does not mean to become a teacher in turn.'

That this is the right view is confirmed by similar injunctions given at the end of the fifth Âranyaka. Here we have first some rules as to who is qualified to recite the Mahâvratra. No one is permitted to do so, who has not passed through the Dikshâ, the initiation for the Agnishôma. If the Mahâvratra is performed as a Sattra, the sacrificer is a Hotre priest, and he naturally has passed through that ceremony. But if the Mahâvratra is performed as an Ekâha or Ahîna ceremony, anybody might be the sacrificer, and therefore it was necessary to say that no one who is adikshita, uninitiated, should recite it for another person; nor should he do so,

2 Âpastamba-sûtras, translated by Bühler, p. 18.
when the Mahâvrata is performed without (or with) an altar, or if it does not last one year. In saying, however, that one should not recite the Mahâvrata for another person, parents and teachers are not to be understood as included, because what is done for them, is done for ourselves.

After these restrictions as to the recitation of the Mahâvrata, follow other restrictions as to the teaching of it, and here we read, as at the end of the Upanishad:

4. 'Let no one teach this day, the Mahâvrata, to one who is not a regular pupil (antevâsin), and has been so for one year, certainly not to one who has not been so for one year; nor to one who is not a brahmaârin and does not study the same Veda\(^{1}\), certainly not to one who does not study the same Veda; nor to one who does not come to him.

5. 'Let the teaching not be more than saying it once or twice, twice only.

6. 'One man should tell it to one man, so says Gâtukaranya.

7. 'Not to a child, nor to a man in his third stage of life.

8. 'The teacher and pupil should not stand, nor walk, nor lie down, nor sit on a couch; but they should both sit on the ground.

9. 'The pupil should not lean backward while learning, nor lean forward. He should not be covered with too much clothing, nor assume the postures of a devotee, but without using any of the apparel of a devotee, simply elevate his knees. Nor should he learn, when he has eaten flesh, when he has seen blood, or a corpse, or when he has done an unlawful thing\(^{2}\); when he has anointed his eyes, oiled or rubbed his body, when he has been shaved or bathed, put colour on, or ornamented himself with flower-wreaths, when he has been writing or effacing his writing\(^{3}\).

10. 'Nor should he finish the reading in one day, so says Gâtukaranya, while according to Gâlava, he should finish it in one day.
Agnivesyâyana holds that he should finish all before the Trikâsîtis\(^{4}\), and then rest in another place finishing it.

11. 'And in the place where he reads this, he should not read

---

\(^{1}\) See Gautama-sûtras XIV, 21, and Bühler's note.

\(^{2}\) Nâvratym âkramya is explained by the commentator by ukkhishâdyâkramanu.

\(^{3}\) This, if rightly translated, would seem to be the earliest mention of actual writing in Sanskrit literature.

\(^{4}\) See Ait. Âr. I, 4, 3, 14.
anything else, though he may read this (the Mahâvrata) where he has read something else.

12. ‘No one should bathe and become a snâtaka\(^1\) who does not read this. Even if he has read many other things, he should not become a snâtaka if he has not read this.

13. ‘Nor should he forget it, and even if he should forget anything else, he should not forget this.

14. ‘No, he should never forget this.

15. ‘If he does not forget this, it will be enough for himself (or for acquiring a knowledge of the Self).

16. ‘It is enough, let him know this to be true.

17. ‘Let him who knows this not communicate, nor dine, nor amuse himself with any one who does not know it.’

Then follow some more rules as to the reading of the Veda in general:

18. ‘When the old water that stood round the roots of trees is dried up (after about the month of Pausha, January to February\(^2\)) he should not read; nor (at any time) in the morning or in the afternoon, when the shadows meet (he should begin at sunrise so soon as the shadows divide, and end in the evening before they fall together). Nor should he read\(^3\) when a cloud has risen; and when there is an unseasonable rain (after the months of Srâvana and Bhâdrapada, August and September\(^4\)) he should stop his Vedic reading for three nights. Nor should he at that time tell stories, not even during the night, nor should he glory in his knowledge.

19. ‘This (the Veda thus learnt and studied) is the name of that Great Being; and he who thus knows the name of that Great Being, he becomes Brahman, yea, he becomes Brahman.’

\(^1\) Âpastamba-sûtras, translated by Bühler, p. 92 (I, 2, 30, 4).
\(^2\) Âpastamba-sûtras, translated by Bühler, p. 33 (I, 3, 9, 2).
\(^3\) Âpastamba-sûtras, translated by Bühler, p. 44 (I, 3, 11, 31).
\(^4\) Âpastamba-sûtras, translated by Bühler, p. 33 (I, 3, 9, 1).
KAUSHÎTAKI-BRÂHMÂNA-UPIANISHAD.
KAUSHTAKI-UPANISHAD.

FIRST ADHYĀYA.

1. Kītrā Gāṅgyāyani¹, forsooth, wishing to perform a sacrifice, chose Āruṇī (Uddālaka², to be his chief priest). But Āruṇī sent his son, Svetaketu, and said: ‘Perform the sacrifice for him.’ When Svetaketu³ had arrived, Kītra asked him: ‘Son of Gautama⁴, is there a hidden place in the world where you are able to place me, or is it the other way, and are you going to place me in the world to which it (that other way) leads⁵?’

¹ It is difficult to determine whether Kītra’s name was Gāṅgyāyani or Gārgyāyani. Professor Weber adopted first Gārgyāyani (Indische Studien I, p. 395), afterwards Gāṅgyāyani (ibid. II, 395). Professor Cowell adopts Gāṅgyāyani, but he tells us that the Telugu MS. reads Gārgyāyani throughout, and the other MSS. B, C do so occasionally. The commentator explains Gāṅgyāyani as the descendant (yuvāpatyam) of Gāṅga. I confess a preference for Gārgyāyani, because both Gaṅgā and Gāṅga are names of rare occurrence in ancient Vedic literature, but I admit that for that very reason the transition of Gāṅgyāyani into Gārgyāyani is perhaps more intelligible than that of Gārgyāyani into Gāṅgyāyani.

² Cf. Kṛ. Up. V, 11, 2; Brīh. Ār. VI, 2, 1.
⁴ Brīh. Ār. VI, 2, 4.
⁵ The question put by Kītra to Svetaketu is very obscure, and was probably from the first intended to be obscure in its very wording. What Kītra wished to ask we can gather from other passages in the Upanishads, where we see another royal sage, Pra-vāhava Gaivali (Kṛ. Up. V, 3; Brīh. Ār. VI, 2), enlightening Svetaketu on the future life. That future life is reached by two roads;
one, the Devapatha, leading to the world of Brahman (the conditioned), beyond which there lies one other stage only, represented by knowledge of and identity with the unconditioned Brahman; the other leading to the world of the fathers, and from thence, after the reward of good works has been consumed, back to a new round of mundane existence. There is a third road for creatures which live and die, worms, insects, and creeping things, but they are of little consequence. Now it is quite clear that the knowledge which king Kîtra possesses, and which Svetaketu does not possess, is that of the two roads after death, sometimes called the right and the left, or the southern and northern roads. These roads are fully described in the Kâândogya-upanishad and in the Brâhad-āranyaka, with certain variations, yet on the whole with the same purpose. The northern or left road, called also the path of the Devas, passes on from light and day to the bright half of the moon; the southern or right road, called also the path of the fathers, passes on from smoke and night to the dark half of the moon. Both roads therefore meet in the moon, but diverge afterwards. While the northern road passes by the six months when the sun moves towards the north, through the sun, (moon,) and the lightning to the world of Brahman, the southern passes by the six months when the sun moves towards the south, to the world of the fathers, the ether, and the moon. The great difference, however, between the two roads is, that while those who travel on the former do not return again to a new life on earth, but reach in the end a true knowledge of the unconditioned Brahman, those who pass on to the world of the fathers and the moon return to earth to be born again and again.

The question therefore which Kîtra addresses to Svetaketu can refer to these two roads only, and though the text is very corrupt, and was so evidently even at the time when the commentary was written, we must try to restore it in accordance with the teaching imparted by Kîtra in what follows. I propose to read: Gautamasya putra, asti samvritam loke yasmin mā dhāsyasy anyatamo vādhi vā tasya (or yasya) mā loke dhāsyasi, 'Is there a hidden place in the world where you (by your sacrificing and teaching) are able to Āruṇi said: 'I also do not know this. Only after having learnt the proper portion of the Veda in Kītra's own dwelling, shall we obtain what others give us (knowledge). Come, we will both go.'

Having said this he took fuel in his hand (like a pupil), and approached Kītra Gāṇgyāyani, saying: 'May I come near to you?' He replied: 'You are worthy of Brahman, O Gautama, because you were not led away by pride. Come hither, I shall make you know clearly.'

2. And Kītra said: All who depart from this world (or this body) go to the moon. In the former, (the bright) half, the moon delights in their spirits; in the other, (the dark) half, the moon sends them on place me, or is it the other way, and will you place me in the world to which it leads?' Even thus the text is by no means satisfactory, but it is better than anyam aho vādhvā, adopted by the commentator and explained by him: Is there a hidden place in that world in which you will place me as another, i.e. as different from the whole world or identical with the whole world, and, if as different, then having bound me (vādhvā = baddhvā) and made me a different person? We may read anyataro for anyatamo vādhvā. The commentator sums up the question as referring to a hidden or not hidden place, where Kītra should be placed as another person or not another person, as bound or not bound; or, as Professor Cowell renders it, 'O son of Gautama, is there any secret place in the world where thou canst set me unconnected, having fixed me there (as wood united with glue); or is there some other place where thou canst set me?' The speculations on the fate of the soul after death seem to have been peculiar to the royal families of India, while the Brahmans dwelt more on what may be called the shorter cut, a knowledge of Brahman as the true Self. To know, with them, was to be, and, after the dissolution of the body, they looked forward to immediate emancipation, without any further wanderings.

1 Worthy to know Brahman, or, as the commentator, who reads brahmārgha, thinks, to be honoured like Brahman.

2 Both roads lead to the moon, and diverge afterwards.
to be born again. Verily, the moon is the door of the Svarga world (the heavenly world). Now, if a man objects to the moon (if one is not satisfied with life there) the moon sets him free. But if a man does not object, then the moon sends him down as rain upon this earth. And according to his deeds and according to his knowledge he is born again here as a worm, or as an insect, or as a fish, or as a bird, or as a lion, or as a boar, or as a serpent, or as a tiger, or as a man, or as something else in different places. When he has thus returned to the earth, some one (a sage) asks: 'Who art thou?' And he should answer: 'From the wise moon, who orders the seasons, when it is born consisting of fifteen parts, from the moon who is the home of our ancestors, the seed was brought. This seed, even me, they (the gods mentioned in the Pañkâgnividyâ) gathered up in an active man, and through an active

---

1 I should like to read aparapakṣhe praganayati, instead of aparapakṣhena, or aparapakshe na. The negative is out of the question, for praganayati, he sends into a new life, is exactly what the moon does to those who do not proceed on the Devapatha to the Brahmaloka. Therefore if the reading aparapakṣhena must be retained, it should be rendered by 'the moon with the dark half sends them into a new life.'

2 This is supposed to be the hidden place, or rather the way to it, when the departed leave the moon, and pass on to lightning and to the world of Brahman. This is in fact the Devayāna, as opposed to the Pitriyāna, described in the Khândogya-upanishad.

3 Parāsvā, dandasūkaviśeshaḥ. There is no authority for translating it by dog; cf. Indische Studien I, 396.

4 This might even include naraka or hell.

5 If riṇavah is here the genitive of ritu, its meaning would be the ordainer of the seasons; cf. Hibbert Lectures, p. 247. Viśakṣhāna is applied to the moon again, II, 9, and the throne of Brahman also is called viśakṣhāna, I, 3.

6 Kh. Up. V, 4-6.
man they brought me to a mother. Then I, growing up to be born, a being living by months, whether twelve or thirteen, was together with my father, who also lived by (years of) twelve or thirteen months, that I might either know it (the true Brahman) or not know it. Therefore, O ye seasons, grant that I may attain immortality (knowledge of Brahman). By this my true saying, by this my toil (beginning with the dwelling in the moon and ending with my birth on earth) I am (like) a season, and the child of the seasons.' ‘Who art thou?’ the sage asks again. ‘I am thou,’ he replies. Then he sets him free (to proceed onward).

3. He (at the time of death), having reached the path of the gods, comes to the world of Agni (fire), to the world of Vāyu (air), to the world of Varuṇa, to the world of Indra, to the world of Pragāpati (Vīrāg), to the world of Brahman (Hiranyagarbha). In that world there is the lake Âra, the moments called Yeṣṭiha, the river Vīgarā (age-less), the tree Ilyā, the city Sālagya, the palace Aparāgita (unconquerable), the door-keepers Indra

1 The commentator takes rītavaḥ as an accusative. I take it as a vocative, and as used in a sense analogous to the Zend ratu, an epithet of Ahura. Darmesteter, Ormazd, p. 12, n. 3.

2 If a person fears heaven (svarga) as much as hell, because neither gives final liberation, then he is fit to proceed to a knowledge of Brahman. It would seem that after this, this person is in the same position as the other who, objecting to remain in the moon, was set free at once.

3 Consisting of ari’s, enemies, such as love, anger, &c. In the Kh. Up. VIII, 5, 3, it is called Ara.

4 Explained to mean, killing the sacrifice, which consists in a desire for Brahman.

5 The same as the aṣvathāḥ somasavanaḥ in Kh. Up. VIII, 5, 3.
and Pragâpati, the hall of Brahman, called Vibhu\(^1\) (built by vibhu, egoism), the throne Vi\(\text{\textec{\textae}}\)kshanâ (buddhi, perception), the couch Amitâugas (endless splendour), and the beloved Mânasi (mind) and her image K\'âkshushi (eye), who, as if taking flowers, are weaving the worlds, and the Apsaras, the Ambâs (sruti, sacred scriptures), and Ambâyavîs (buddhi, understanding), and the rivers Ambayâs (leading to the knowledge of Brahman). To this world he who knows this (who knows the Paryâ\(\text{\textec{\textae}}\)ka-vidy\(\text{\textec{\textae}}\)) approaches. Brahman says to him: 'Run towards him (servants) with such worship as is due to myself. He has reached the river Vîgarâ (age-less), he will never age.'

4. Then five hundred Apsaras go towards him, one hundred with garlands in their hands, one hundred with ointments in their hands, one hundred with perfumes in their hands, one hundred with garments in their hands, one hundred with fruit\(^2\) in their hands. They adorn him with an adornment worthy of Brahman, and when thus adorned with the adornment of Brahman, the knower of Brahman moves towards Brahman (neut.)\(^3\). He comes to the lake Âra, and he crosses it by the mind, while those who come to it without knowing the truth\(^4\), are drowned. He comes to the moments called Yesh\(\text{\textec{\textae}}\)tiha, they flee from him.

---

\(^1\) Vibhunâmamakam pramitam sabhâsthalam.

\(^2\) Some MSS. read phanahastâ\(\text{\textec{\textae}}\), and the commentator explains phana by âbharana.

\(^3\) Though brahman is used here as a neuter, it refers to the conditioned Brahman.

\(^4\) Samprativid is here explained as brahmavidyârânya, ignorant, while in other places (Ait. Âr. II, 3, 1) it stands for samyagabhigâna. If the latter is the true meaning, we might read here tam itvâsamma-prativedo.
He comes to the river Vigarā, and crosses it by the mind alone, and there shakes off his good and evil deeds. His beloved relatives obtain the good, his unbelieved relatives the evil he has done. And as a man, driving in a chariot, might look at the two wheels (without being touched by them), thus he will look at day and night, thus at good and evil deeds, and at all pairs (at all correlative things, such as light and darkness, heat and cold, &c.). Being freed from good and freed from evil he, the knower of Brahman (neut.), moves towards Brahman.

5. He approaches the tree Ilya, and the odour of Brahman reaches him. He approaches the city Sâlagya, and the flavour of Brahman reaches him. He approaches the palace Aparâgita, and the splendour of Brahman reaches him. He approaches the door-keepers Indra and Pragâpati, and they run away from him. He approaches the hall Vibhu, and the glory of Brahman reaches him (he thinks, I am Brahman). He approaches the throne Vîkakshana. The Sâman verses, Brîhad and Rathantara, are the eastern feet of that throne; the Sâman verses, Syaita and Naudhasa, its western feet; the Sâman verses, Vairûpa and Vairâga, its sides lengthways (south and north); the Sâman verses, Sâkvara and Raivata, its sides crossways (east and west). That throne is Prâgînâ, knowledge, for by knowledge (self-knowledge) he sees clearly. He approaches the couch Amitaugas. That is Prâza (speech). The past and the future are its eastern feet; prosperity and earth its western feet; the Sâman verses, Brîhad and Rathantara, are the two sides lengthways of the couch (south and north);

1 Cf. Atharva-veda XV; Aufrecht, in Indische Studien I, p. 122.
the Sâman verses, Bhadra and Yagñâyagñîya, are its cross-sides at the head and feet (east and west); the Rîk and Sâman are the long sheets\(^1\) (east and west); the Yagus the cross-sheets (south and north); the moon-beam the cushion; the Udgîtha the (white) coverlet; prosperity the pillow\(^2\). On this couch sits Brahman, and he who knows this (who knows himself one with Brahman sitting on the couch) mounts it first with one foot only. Then Brahman says to him: ‘Who art thou?’ and he shall answer:

6. ‘I am (like) a season, and the child of the seasons, sprung from the womb of endless space, from the light (from the luminous Brahman). The light, the origin of the year, which is the past, which is the present, which is all living things, and all elements, is the Self\(^3\). Thou art the Self. What thou art, that am I.’

Brahman says to him: ‘Who am I?’ He shall answer: ‘That which is, the true’ (Sat-tyam).

Brahman asks: ‘What is the true?’ He says to him: ‘What is different from the gods and from the senses (prâna) that is Sat, but the gods and the

---

\(^1\) Sheets or coverings seem more applicable here than mere threads forming the woof and warp; cf. Aufrecht, Indische Studien I, p. 131.

\(^2\) I read udgîtha upasrīh, srīr upabarhañam. The Atharva text has udgîtho ’parayaḥ.

\(^3\) This passage is corrupt, and the various readings and various interpretations of the commentators do not help us much. One view, which I have followed, as far as possible, is that it had to be explained how the same being could be the child of the seasons, or living from year to year, and, at the same time, born of the light. The answer is, Because light is the seed or cause of the year, and the year the cause of everything else. I take no responsibility for this view, and I see no way of discovering the original reading and the original meaning of these sentences.
senses are Tyam. Therefore by that name Sat-tya (true) is called all this whatever there is. All this thou art."

7. This is also declared by a verse: 'This great Rishi, whose belly is the Yagus, the head the Sâman, the form the Rûk, is to be known as being imperishable, as being Brahman.'

Brahman says to him: 'How dost thou obtain my male names?' He should answer: 'By breath (prânâh).'

Brahman asks: 'How my female names?' He should answer: 'By speech (vâz).'

Brahman asks: 'How my neuter names?' He should answer: 'By mind (manas).

'How smells?' 'By the nose.' 'How forms?' 'By the eye.' 'How sounds?' 'By the ear.' 'How flavours of food?' 'By the tongue.' 'How actions?' 'By the hands.' 'How pleasures and pain?' 'By the body.' 'How joy, delight, and offspring?' 'By the organ.' 'How journeyings?' 'By the feet.' 'How thoughts, and what is to be known and desired?' 'By knowledge (pragnâ) alone.'

Brahman says to him: 'Water indeed is this my world¹, the whole Brahman world, and it is thine.'

Whatever victory, whatever might belongs to Brahman, that victory and that might he obtains who knows this, yea, who knows this².

¹ It sprang from water and the other elements. Comm. Professor Weber proposes to translate âpaḥ by Erlangungen, acquisitions, with reference to apnoshi, 'how dost thou acquire my names?' in what precedes.
² Who knows the conditioned and mythological form of Brahman as here described, sitting on the couch.
Second Adhyāya.

1. Prâna (breath)¹ is Brahman, thus says Kaushitaki. Of this prâna, which is Brahman, the mind (manas) is the messenger, speech the housekeeper, the eye the guard, the ear the informant. He who knows mind as the messenger of prâna, which is Brahman, becomes possessed of the messenger. He who knows speech as the housekeeper, becomes possessed of the housekeeper. He who knows the eye as the guard, becomes possessed of the guard. He who knows the ear as the informant, becomes possessed of the informant.

Now to that prâna, which is Brahman, all these deities (mind, speech, eye, ear) bring an offering, though he asks not for it, and thus to him who knows this all creatures bring an offering, though he asks not for it. For him who knows this, there is this Upanishad (secret vow), 'Beg not!' As a man who has begged through a village and got nothing sits down and says, 'I shall never eat anything given by those people,' and as then those who formerly refused him press him (to accept their alms), thus is the rule for him who begs not, but the charitable will press him and say, 'Let us give to thee.'

2. Prâna (breath) is Brahman, thus says Paingya. And in that prâna, which is Brahman, the eye

¹ In the first chapter it was said, 'He approaches the couch Amitaugas, that is prâna, breath, spirit, life. Therefore having explained in the first adhyāya the knowledge of the couch (of Brahman), the next subject to be explained is the knowledge of prâna, the living spirit, taken for a time as Brahman, or the last cause of everything.
stands firm behind speech, the ear stands firm behind the eye, the mind stands firm behind the ear, and the spirit stands firm behind the mind. To that prāna, which is Brahman, all these deities bring an offering, though he asks not for it, and thus to him who knows this, all creatures bring an offering, though he asks not for it. For him who knows this, there is this Upanishad (secret vow), ‘Beg not!’ As a man who has begged through a village and got nothing sits down and says, ‘I shall never eat anything given by those people,’ and as then those who formerly refused him press him (to accept their alms), thus is the rule for him who begs not, but the charitable will press him and say, ‘Let us give to thee.’

3. Now follows the attainment of the highest treasure (scil. prāna, spirit). If a man meditates on that highest treasure, let him on a full moon or a new moon, or in the bright fortnight, under an auspicious Nakshatra, at one of these proper times, bending his right knee, offer oblations of ghee with a ladle (sruva), after having placed the fire, swept the ground, strewn the sacred grass, and sprinkled water. Let him say: ‘The deity called Speech is

1 I translate vakparastāt, ākṣubhparastāt, manabhparastāt as compounds, and read srotaparastāt. The commentator requires this. He says that speech is uncertain, and has to be checked by the eye. The eye is uncertain, taking mother of pearl for silver, and must be checked by the ear. The ear is uncertain, and must be checked by the mind, for unless the mind is attentive, the ear hears not. The mind, lastly, depends on the spirit, for without spirit there is no mind. The commentator is right in reading rundhe or runddhe instead of rundhate.

2 The vital spirits are called the highest treasure, because a man surrenders everything to preserve his vital spirits or his life.

3 Cf. Brīh. Âr. VI, 3, 1.
the attainer, may it attain this for me from him (who possesses and can bestow what I wish for). Svāhā to it!

'The deity called prāna (breath) is the attainer, may it attain this for me from him. Svāhā to it!'
'The deity called the eye is the attainer, may it attain this for me from him. Svāhā to it!'
'The deity called the ear is the attainer, may it attain this for me from him. Svāhā to it!'
'The deity called mind (manas) is the attainer of it, may it attain this for me from him. Svāhā to it!'
'The deity called pragñā (knowledge) is the attainer of it, may it attain this for me from him. Svāhā to it!

Then having inhaled the smell of the smoke, and having rubbed his limbs with the ointment of ghee, walking on in silence, let him declare his wish, or let him send a messenger. He will surely obtain his wish.

4. Now follows the Daiva Smara, the desire to be accomplished by the gods. If a man desires to become dear¹ to any man or woman, or to any men or women, then at one of the (fore-mentioned) proper times he offers, in exactly the same manner (as before), oblations of ghee, saying: 'I offer thy speech in myself, I (this one here ²), Svāhā.' 'I offer thy ear in myself, I (this one here), Svāhā.' 'I offer thy ¹ As dear as prāna or life.

² The commentator explains these mysterious utterances by: 'I offer, I throw, in the fire, which is lit by the fuel of thy indifference or dislike, in myself, being the object of thy love, speech, the organ of speech, of thee, who art going to love me. This one, i.e. I myself, or my love, may prosper. Svāhā, my speech, may grant approval to the oblation of me, the lover.'
mind in myself, I (this one here), Svâhâ.' 'I offer thy prâgñâ (knowledge) in myself, I (this one here), Svâhâ.' Then having inhaled the smell of the smoke, and having rubbed his limbs with the ointment of ghee, walking on in silence, let him try to come in contact or let him stand speaking in the wind, (so that the wind may carry his words to the person by whom he desires to be loved). Surely he becomes dear, and they think of him.

5. Now follows the restraint (samyamana) instituted by Pratardana (the son of Divodâsa): they call it the inner Agni-hotra. So long as a man speaks, he cannot breathe, he offers all the while his prâna (breath) in his speech. And so long as a man breathes, he cannot speak, he offers all the while his speech in his breath. These two endless and immortal oblations he offers always, whether waking or sleeping. Whatever other oblations there are (those, e.g. of the ordinary Agnihotra, consisting of milk and other things), they have an end, for they consist of works (which, like all works, have an end). The ancients, knowing this (the best Agnihotra), did not offer the (ordinary) Agnihotra.

6. Uktha¹ is Brahman, thus said Sushkabhrinâgâra. Let him meditate on it (the uktha) as the same with the Rik, and all beings will praise him as the best. Let him meditate on it as the same with the Yagus, and all beings will join before him as the best. Let him meditate on it as the same with the Sâman, and all beings will bow before him as the best. Let him meditate on it as the same with might, let him meditate on it as the same with glory, let him meditate on it as the same with splendour. For as the bow is among weapons the mightiest, the most glorious, the most splendid, thus is he who knows this among all beings the mightiest, the most glorious, the most splendid. The Adhvaryu conceives the fire of the altar, which is used for the sacrifice, to be himself. In it he (the Adhvaryu) weaves the Yagus portion of the sacrifice. And in the Yagus portion the Hotri weaves the Rik portion of the sacrifice. And in the Rik portion the Udgâtri weaves the Sâman portion of the sacrifice. He (the Adhvaryu or prâna) is the self of the threefold knowledge; he indeed is the self of it (of prâna). He who knows this is the self of it (becomes prâna).

¹ Uktha, a Vedic hymn, has been identified with prâna, breath, in the Kâuva and other Sâkhâs (Brîh. Âr. V, 13, 1; Ait. Âr. II, 1, 2). Here uktha, i.e. the prâna of the uktha, is further identified with Brahman. As uktha (the hymn) is prâna, and as the sacrifice is performed with hymns, the sacrifice, too, is uktha, and therefore prâna, and therefore Brahman. Comm.

1 The verbs ark, yug, and sannam are not used idiomatically, but with reference to the words rik, yagus, and sàman.

2 The commentator explains this somewhat differently. He takes it to be the object of the last paragraph to show that the Prâna-vidyâ can ultimately produce final liberation, and not only temporal rewards. The Adhvaryu priest, he says, takes what is called uktha, and has been identified with Rik, Yagus, and Sàman hymns, all contained in the mouth, as being outwardly the sacrificial fire of the altar, because that fire cannot be lighted without such hymns. Thus the self of the Adhvaryu priest becomes identified, not only with the uktha, the hymns, but also with the sacrificial fire, and he meditates on himself as fire, as hymn (uktha), and as breath (prâna). I read sa esha sarvasyai trayyai vidyâyâ åtmâ, esha u evâsytâmâ. Etadâtmâ bhavati ya evam veda. But if we read asyâtma, we cannot with the commentator explain it by asyâ uktâyâs trayyâ åtmâ, but must refer asya to prâna, breath, life, which is here to be identified with Brahman.
7. Next follow the three kinds of meditation of the all-conquering (sarvagítt) Kaushitaki. The all-conquering Kaushitaki adores the sun when rising, having put on the sacrificial cord, having brought water, and having thrice sprinkled the water-cup, saying: 'Thou art the deliverer, deliver me from sin.' In the same manner he adores the sun when in the zenith, saying: 'Thou art the highest deliverer, deliver me highly from sin.' In the same manner he adores the sun when setting, saying: 'Thou art the full deliverer, deliver me fully from sin.' Thus he fully removes whatever sin he committed by day and by night. And in the same manner he who knows this, likewise adores the sun, and fully removes whatever sin he committed by day and by night.

8. Then (secondly) let him worship every month (in the year) at the time of the new moon, the moon as it is seen in the west in the same manner (as before described with regard to the sun), or let him send forth his speech toward the moon with two green blades of grass, saying: 'O thou who art mistress of immortal joy, through that gentle heart of mine which abides in the moon, may I never weep for misfortune concerning my children.'

The children of him (who thus adores the moon) do not indeed die before him. Thus it is with a man to whom a son is already born.

Now for one to whom no son is born as yet. He mutters the three Rík verses. 'Increase, O Soma! may vigour come to thee' (Rv. I, 91, 16; IX, 31, 4).

1 This is one of the earliest, if not the earliest mention of the yagñópavíta, the sacred cord as worn over the left shoulder for sacrificial purposes; cf. Taït. Bráhm. III, 19, 10-12.
'May milk, may food go to thee' (Rv. I, 91, 18);
'That ray which the Adityas gladden.'

Having muttered these three Rik verses, he says:
'Do not increase by our breath (prāna), by our offspring, by our cattle; he who hates us and whom we hate, increase by his breath, by his offspring, by his cattle. Thus I turn the turn of the god, I return the turn of Aditya.' After these words, having raised the right arm (toward Soma), he lets it go again 2.

1 This refers to movements of the arm, following the moon and the sun.

2 It is extremely difficult to translate the Vedic verses which are quoted in the Upanishads. They are sometimes slightly changed on purpose (see § 11), frequently turned from their original purport by the authors of the Upanishads themselves, and then again subjected to the most fanciful interpretations by the various commentators on the Upanishads. In our paragraph (§ 8) the text followed by the commentator differs from the printed text. The commentator seems to have read: Yat te susīmam hridayam adhi kandrasmasi srītam, tenāmritavasyesāne māham pautram agham rudam. I have translated according to the commentator, at least up to a certain point, for, as Professor Cowell remarks, there is an undercurrent in the commentator’s explanation, implying a comparison between the husband as the sun or fire, and the wife as the moon, which it would be difficult to render in an English translation. The same or a very similar verse occurs in § 10, while other modifications of it may be seen in Âsval. Gṛihya-sūtras I, 13, 7, and elsewhere. The translation of the verses in full, of three of which the Upanishad gives the beginnings only, would be according to the commentator: 'O goddess of the moon, who hast obtained immortal joy through that which is a beautiful (portion of the sun) placed in the moon, and filling thy heart (with pleasure), may I never weep for misfortune concerning my children.'

Rv. I, 91, 16; IX, 31, 4. 'O goddess of the moon, increase! may the vigour from everywhere (from every limb of the fire or the sun) go to thee! Help us in the attainment of food.' Rv. I, 91, 18. 'O goddess of the moon, may the streams of thy milk go well to our sons, those streams of milk which are invigorating, and
9. Then (thirdly) let him worship on the day of the full moon the moon as it is seen in the east in the same manner, saying: 'Thou art Soma, the king, the wise, the five-mouthed, the lord of creatures. The Brâhmana is one of thy mouths; with that mouth thou eatest the kings (Kshatriyas); make me an eater of food by that mouth! The king is one of thy mouths; with that mouth thou eatest the people (Vaisyjas); make me an eater of food by that mouth! The hawk is one of thy mouths; with that mouth thou eatest the birds; make me an eater of food by that mouth! Fire is one of thy mouths; with that mouth thou eatest this world; make me an eater of food by that mouth! In thee there is the fifth mouth; with that mouth thou eatest all beings; make me an eater of food by that mouth! Do not decrease by our life, by our offspring, by our cattle; he who hates us and whom we hate, decrease by his life, by his offspring, by his cattle. Thus I turn the turn of the god, I return the turn of Āditya.' After these words, having raised the right arm, he lets it go again.

10. Next (having addressed these prayers to Soma) when being with his wife, let him stroke her help to conquer the enemy. O Soma-goddess, increasing for immortal happiness (for the birth of a son), do thou place the highest glory (the streams of thy milk) in the sky.' 'That ray (sushumnâ) which (as a woman) the Ādityas gladden, that Soma which as imperishable the imperishable Ādityas drink, may the guardian of the world (Pragâpata), Brâhaspati, and king Varuna gladden us by it.'

The translations are made by the commentator regardless of grammar and sense: yet they command a certain authority, and must be taken into account as throwing light on the latest development of Indian mysticism.
heart, saying: 'O fair one, who hast obtained immortal joy by that which has entered thy heart through Pra^apati, mayest thou never fall into sorrow about thy children.' Her children then do not die before her.

11. Next, if a man has been absent and returns home, let him smell (kiss) his son's head, saying: 'Thou springest from every limb, thou art born from the heart, thou, my son, art my self indeed, live thou a hundred harvests.' He gives him his name, saying: 'Be thou a stone, be thou an axe, be thou solid gold; thou, my son, art light indeed, live thou a hundred harvests.' He pronounces his name. Then he embraces him, saying: 'As Pra^apati (the lord of creatures) embraced his creatures for their welfare, thus I embrace thee,' (pronouncing his name.) Then he mutters into his right ear, saying: 'O thou, quick Maghavan, give to him' (Rv. III, 36, 103). 'O Indra, bestow the best wishes' (Rv. II, 21, 6), thus he whispers into his left ear. Let him then thrice smell (kiss) his head, saying: 'Do not cut off (the line of our race), do not suffer. Live a hundred harvests of life; I kiss thy head, O son, with thy name.' He then thrice makes a lowing sound over his head, saying: 'I low over thee with the lowing sound of cows.'

12. Next follows the Daiva Parimara4, the dying around of the gods (the absorption of the two

1 Cf. Âsvalâyana Gṛihya-sûtras I, 13, 7.
2 Widely scattered, everywhere desired. Comm. Professor Cowell proposes unscattered, hoarded, or unconcealed.
3 The original has asme, to us, not asmai, to him.
classes of gods, mentioned before, into prâna or Brahman). This Brahman shines forth indeed when the fire burns, and it dies when it burns not. Its splendour goes to the sun alone, the life (prâna, the moving principle) to the air.

This Brahman shines forth indeed when the sun is seen, and it dies when it is not seen. Its splendour goes to the moon alone, the life (prâna) to the air.

This Brahman shines forth indeed when the moon is seen, and it dies when it is not seen. Its splendour goes to the lightning alone, its life (prâna) to the air.

This Brahman shines forth indeed when the lightning flashes, and it dies when it flashes not. Its splendour goes to the air, and the life (prâna) to the air.

Thus all these deities (i.e. fire, sun, moon, lightning), having entered the air, though dead, do not vanish; and out of the very air they rise again. So much with reference to the deities (mythological). Now then with reference to the body (physiological).

13. This Brahman shines forth indeed when one speaks with speech, and it dies when one does not speak. His splendour goes to the eye alone, the life (prâna) to breath (prâna).

This Brahman shines forth indeed when one sees with the eye, and it dies when one does not see. Its splendour goes to the ear alone, the life (prâna) to breath (prâna).

This Brahman shines forth indeed when one hears with the ear, and it dies when one does not hear. Its splendour goes to the mind alone, the life (prâna) to breath (prâna).
This Brahman shines forth indeed when one thinks with the mind, and it dies when one does not think. Its splendour goes to the breath (prâna) alone, and the life (prâna) to breath (prâna).

Thus all these deities (the senses, &c.), having entered breath or life (prâna) alone, though dead, do not vanish; and out of very breath (prâna) they rise again. And if two mountains, the southern and northern, were to move forward trying to crush him who knows this, they would not crush him. But those who hate him and those whom he hates, they die around him.

14. Next follows the Nîhîsreyasâdâna (the accepting of the pre-eminence of prâna (breath or life) by the other gods). The deities (speech, eye, ear, mind), contending with each for who was the best, went out of this body, and the body lay without breathing, withered, like a log of wood. Then speech went into it, but speaking by speech, it lay still. Then the eye went into it, but speaking by speech, and seeing by the eye, it lay still. Then the ear went into it, but speaking by speech, seeing by the eye, hearing by the ear, it lay still. Then mind went into it, but speaking by speech, seeing by the eye, hearing by the ear, thinking by the mind, it lay still. Then breath (prâna, life) went into it, and thence it rose at once. All these deities, having recognised the pre-eminence in prâna, and having comprehended prâna alone as the conscious self (pragñâtman), went out of this body with all these (five different kinds of prâna), and resting in the air (knowing that prâna had entered the air), and merged in the ether (âkâsa), they went to heaven. And in the same manner he who knows this, having recognised the pre-eminence in prâna, and having comprehended prâna alone as the conscious self (pragnâtman), goes out of this body with all these (does no longer believe in this body), and resting in the air, and merged in the ether, he goes to heaven, he goes to where those gods (speech, &c.) are. And having reached this he, who knows this, becomes immortal with that immortality which those gods enjoy.

---

1 For other versions of this story see Kh. Up. V, 1, note 2; Ait. Âr. II, 1, 4, 9; Brâh. Âr. VI, 1, 1-14; and Kaush. Up. III, 3.

15. Next follows the father's tradition to the son, and thus they explain it. The father, when going to depart, calls his son, after having strewn the house with fresh grass, and having laid the sacrificial fire, and having placed near it a pot of water with a jug (full of rice), himself covered with a new cloth, and dressed in white. He places himself above his son, touching his organs with his own organs, or he may deliver the tradition to him while he sits before him. Then he delivers it to him. The father says: 'Let me place my speech in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy speech in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my scent (prâna) in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy scent in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my eye in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy eye in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my ear in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy ear in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my tastes of food in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy tastes of food in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my actions in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy actions in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my pleasure and pain in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy pleasure and pain in me.' The father says: 'Let me place happiness, joy, and offspring in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy happiness, joy, and offspring in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my walking in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy walking in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my mind in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy mind in me.' The father says: 'Let me place my knowledge (pragnā) in thee.' The son says: 'I take thy knowledge in me.' But if the father is very ill, he may say shortly: 'Let me place my spirits (prānas) in thee,' and the son: 'I take thy spirits in me.'

Then the son walks round his father keeping his right side towards him, and goes away. The father calls after him: 'May fame, glory of countenance, and honour always follow thee.' Then the other looks back over his left shoulder, covering himself with his hand or the hem of his garment, saying: 'Obtain the heavenly worlds (svarga) and all desires.'

If the father recovers, let him be under the authority of his son, or let him wander about (as an ascetic). But if he departs, then let them despatch him, as he ought to be despatched, yea, as he ought to be despatched.

1 Another sākhā adds here dhiyāḥ, the thoughts (active), vigñātavyam, their object, and kāmāḥ, desires.

2 I have taken samāpayati in the sense of performing the last duties towards a dead person, though I confess I know of no parallel passage in which samāpayati occurs in that sense. Professor Cowell translates: 'If he dies, then let them cause the son duly to receive the tradition, as the tradition is to be given.' The text itself varies, for the reading presupposed by the commentator is enam (putram) samāpayati, instead of enam samāpayeyuh.
Third Adhyāya

1. Pratardana, forsooth, the son of Divodāsa (king of Kāśi), came by means of fighting and strength to the beloved abode of Indra. Indra said to him: 'Pratardana, let me give you a boon to choose.' And Pratardana answered: 'Do you yourself choose that boon for me which you deem most beneficial for a man.' Indra said to him: 'No one who chooses, chooses for another; choose thyself.' Then Pratardana replied: 'Then that boon to choose is no boon for me.'

Then, however, Indra did not swerve from the truth, for Indra is truth. Indra said to him: 'Know me only; that is what I deem most beneficial for man, that he should know me. I slew the three-headed son of Tvāshṭrī; I delivered the Arunmukhas, the devotees, to the wolves (sālavṛśika); breaking many treaties, I killed the people of Prahlāda in heaven, the people of Puloma in the sky, the people of Kālakaṅga on earth. And not one hair of me was harmed there. And he who knows me thus, by no deed of his is his life harmed, not by the murder of 1 The object now is to explain the true Brahma-vidyā, while the first and second chapters are only introductory, treating of the worship of the couch (paryāṅkopāsanā) and of the worship of prāṇa.

---

2 This refers to heroic deeds performed by Indra, as represented in the hymns of the Rig-veda. See Rig-veda V, 34, 4, and Sāyana's commentary; Ait. Brāhm. VII, 28. Weber, Indische Studien I, 410-418, has tried to discover an original physical meaning in the heroic deeds ascribed to Indra. A curious remark is made by the commentator, who says that the skulls of the Arunmukhas were turned into the thorns of the desert (karīṛa) which remain to this day,—a very common phase in popular tradition. his mother, not by the murder of his father, not by theft, not by the killing of a Brahman. If he is going to commit a sin, the bloom \(^1\) does not depart from his face.

2. Indra said: 'I am prāṇa, meditate on me as the conscious self (pragnātman), as life, as immortality. Life is prāṇa, prāṇa is life. Immortality is prāṇa, prāṇa is immortality. As long as prāṇa dwells in this body, so long surely there is life. By prāṇa he obtains immortality in the other world, by knowledge true conception. He who meditates on me as life and immortality, gains his full life in this world, and obtains in the Svarga world immortality and indestructibility.'

(Pratardana said): 'Some maintain here, that the prāṇas become one, for (otherwise) no one could at the same time make known a name by speech, see a form with the eye, hear a sound with the ear, think a thought with the mind. After having become one, the prāṇas perceive all these together, one by one. While speech speaks, all prāṇas speak after it. While the eye sees, all prāṇas see after it. While the ear hears, all prāṇas hear after it. While the mind thinks, all prāṇas think after it. While the prāṇa breathes, all prāṇas breathe after it.'

'Thus it is indeed,' said Indra, 'but nevertheless there is a pre-eminence among the prāṇas.\(^2\)

3. Man lives deprived of speech, for we see dumb people. Man lives deprived of sight, for we see

\(^1\) Professor Cowell compares Taittirīya-Samhitā III, 1, 1, nāsya nītām na haro vyeti.

\(^2\) Prāṇās, in the plural, is supposed to stand for the five senses as modifications of breath. It would be better if we could read prāṇasya nihsreyasam. See before, II, 14.
blind people. Man lives deprived of hearing, for we see deaf people. Man lives deprived of mind, for we see infants. Man lives deprived of his arms, deprived of his legs, for we see it thus. But prāna alone is the conscious self (pragñātman), and having laid hold of this body, it makes it rise up. Therefore it is said, Let man worship it alone as uktha. What is prāna, that is pragñā (self-consciousness); what is pragñā (self-consciousness), that is prāna, for together they (pragñā and prāna) live in this body, and together they go out of it. Of that, this is the evidence, this is the understanding. When a man, being thus asleep, sees no dream whatever, he becomes one with that prāna alone. Then speech goes to him (when he is absorbed in prāna) with all names, the eye with all forms, the ear with all sounds, the mind with all thoughts. And when he awakes, then, as from a burning fire sparks proceed in all directions, thus from that self the prānas (speech, &c.) proceed, each towards its place; from the prānas the gods (Agni, &c.), from the gods the worlds.

Of this, this is the proof, this is the understanding. When a man is thus sick, going to die, falling into weakness and faintness, they say: 'His thought has departed, he hears not, he sees not, he speaks not, he thinks not.' Then he becomes one with that prāna alone. Then speech goes to him (who is absorbed in prāna) with all names, the eye with all

1 Uktha, hymn, is artificially derived from ut-thāpayati, to raise up, and hence uktha, hymn, is to be meditated on as prāna, breath, which likewise raises up the body. See Ait. År. II, 1, 15.
2 He is absorbed in prāna. Or should it be prānah as nominative?
forms, the ear with all sounds, the mind with all thoughts. And when he departs from this body, he departs together with all these.

4. Speech gives up to him (who is absorbed in prâna) all names, so that by speech he obtains all names. The nose gives up to him all odours, so that by scent he obtains all odours. The eye gives up to him all forms, so that by the eye he obtains all forms. The ear gives up to him all sounds, so that by the ear he obtains all sounds. The mind gives up to him all thoughts, so that by the mind he obtains all thoughts. This is the complete absorption in prâna. And what is prâna is pragñâ (self-consciousness), what is pragñâ (self-consciousness) is prâna. For together do these two live in the body, and together do they depart.

Now we shall explain how all things become one in that pragñâ (self-consciousness).

5. Speech is one portion taken out of pragñâ (self-conscious knowledge), the word is its object, placed outside. The nose is one portion taken out of it, the odour is its object, placed outside. The eye is one portion taken out of it, the form is its object, placed outside. The ear is one portion taken out of it, the sound is its object, placed outside. The tongue is one portion taken out of it, the taste of food is its object, placed outside. The two hands

---

1 According to another reading we might translate, 'Speech takes away all names from that body; and prâna, in which speech is absorbed, thus obtains all names.'

2 I read ud̐ţh̐am or ud̐ţ̐h̐am, instead of ad̐ţ̐h̐am, explained by the commentator as ad̐ţ̐duhat. Professor Cowell translates, 'Speech verily milked one portion thereof,' which may have been the original purport of the writer.
are one portion taken out of it, their action is their object, placed outside. The body is one portion taken out of it, its pleasure and pain are its object, placed outside. The organ is one portion taken out of it, happiness, joy, and offspring are its object, placed outside. The two feet are one portion taken out of it, movements are their object, placed outside. Mind is one portion taken out of it, thoughts and desires are its object, placed outside.

6. Having by prajñā (self-conscious knowledge) taken possession of speech, he obtains by speech all words. Having by prajñā taken possession of the nose, he obtains all odours. Having by prajñā taken possession of the eye, he obtains all forms. Having by prajñā taken possession of the ear, he obtains all sounds. Having by prajñā taken possession of the tongue, he obtains all tastes of food. Having by prajñā taken possession of the two hands, he obtains all actions. Having by prajñā taken possession of the body, he obtains pleasure and pain. Having by prajñā taken possession of the organ, he obtains happiness, joy, and offspring. Having by prajñā taken possession of the two feet, he obtains all movements. Having by prajñā taken possession of mind, he obtain all thoughts.

7. For without prajñā (self-consciousness) speech does not make known (to the self) any word.¹ 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that word.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the nose does not make known any odour. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that odour.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the eye does not make known any form. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that form.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the ear does not make known any sound. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that sound.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the tongue does not make known any taste. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that taste.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the two hands do not make known any act. 'Our mind was absent,' they say, 'we did not perceive any act.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the body does not make known pleasure or pain. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that pleasure or pain.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the organ does not make known happiness, joy, or offspring. 'My mind was absent,' he says, 'I did not perceive that happiness, joy, or offspring.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) the two feet do not make known any movement. 'Our mind was absent,' they say, 'we did not perceive that movement.' Without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) no thought succeeds, nothing can be known that is to be known.

¹ Professor Cowell has translated a passage from the commentary which is interesting as showing that its author and the author of the Upanishad too had a clear conception of the correlative nature of knowledge. 'The organ of sense,' he says, 'cannot exist without prajñā (self-consciousness), nor the objects of sense be obtained without the organ, therefore—on the principle, that when one thing cannot exist without another, that thing is said to be identical with the other—as the cloth, for instance, being

8. Let no man try to find out what speech is, let him know the speaker. Let no man try to find out what odour is, let him know him who smells. Let no man try to find out what form is, let him know the seer. Let no man try to find out what sound is, let never perceived without the threads, is identical with them, or the (false perception of) silver being never found without the mother of pearl is identical with it, so the objects of sense being never found without the organs are identical with them, and the organs being never found without pra\(\text{\textit{g}}\)\(\text{\textna}\) (self-consciousness) are identical with it.

him know the hearer. Let no man try to find out the tastes of food, let him know the knower of tastes. Let no man try to find out what action is, let him know the agent. Let no man try to find out what pleasure and pain are, let him know the knower of pleasure and pain. Let no man try to find out what happiness, joy, and offspring are, let him know the knower of happiness, joy, and offspring. Let no man try to find out what movement is, let him know the mover. Let no man try to find out what mind is, let him know the thinker. These ten objects (what is spoken, smelled, seen, &c.) have reference to pragnā (self-consciousness), the ten subjects (speech, the senses, mind) have reference to objects. If there were no objects, there would be no subjects; and if there were no subjects, there would be no objects. For on either side alone nothing could be achieved. But that (the self of pragnā, consciousness, and prāna, life) is not many, (but one.) For as in a car the circumference of a wheel is placed on the spokes, and the spokes on the nave, thus are these objects (circumference) placed on the subjects (spokes), and the subjects on the prāna. And that prāna (breath, the living and breathing power) indeed is the self of pragnā (the self-conscious self), blessed, imperishable, immortal. He does not increase by a good action, nor decrease by a bad action. For he (the self of prāna and pragnā) makes him, whom he wishes to lead up from these worlds, do a good deed; and the same makes him, whom he wishes to lead down from these worlds, do a bad deed. And he is the guardian of the world, he is

1 The other text says, 'whom he wishes to draw after him; and whom he wishes to draw away from these worlds.' Rāmatīrtha, in the king of the world, he is the lord of the universe,— and he is my (Indra's) self, thus let it be known, yea, thus let it be known!

Fourth Adhyāya1.

1. There was formerly Gārgya Bālákī2, famous as a man of great reading; for it was said of him that he lived among the Usīnaras, among the Satvat-Matsyas, the Kuru-Pañčālas, the Kāśi-Videhas3. Having gone to Agātasātru, (the king) of Kāśi, he said to him: 'Shall I tell you Brahman?' Agātasātru said to him: 'We give a thousand (cows) for that speech (of yours), for verily all people run away, saying, "Ganaka (the king of Mithilā) is our father (patron)."

2.4 Br̥had-āranyaka-Kaus̥hitaki-brाहmanav- upanishad.

i. Āditye purushah. i. Id.
atishthāḥ sarveshām br̥ihat pāndaravāsā his commentary on the Mait. Up. 3, 2, quotes the text as translated above.

1 Prāna, breath or life, has been explained in the preceding chapter. But this prāna is not yet the highest point that has to be reached. Prāna, life, even as united with prāṇā, consciousness, is only a covering of something else, viz. the Self, and this Highest Self has now to be explained.

2 The same story is told in the Br̥had-āranyaka II, 1 seq., but with important variations.

3 I take iti to depend on saṃspash/a, and read satvanmatsyeshu, though the commentary seems to have read so 'vasan, or sa vasan, for savasan. See Introduction, p. lxxvii.

4 The second paragraph forms a kind of table of contents for the discussion which is to follow. I have given instead a fuller table of contents, taken from the Br̥had-āranyaka II, as compared with the Kaus̥hitaki-upanishad in its two texts. The variations of text A are given in small letters. In text B, the table of contents is given at the end of the discussion, in § 18.
bhūtānām mūrdhā rāgā.

(ānduravāsā) atish-thāḥ sarveshām bhūtānām mūrdhā.

ii. Kandre purushah.
brīḥat pānduravāsāḥ somo rāgā. (Nā- syānāṃ kṣhiyate, is the reward.)

ii. Kandramasi.
somo rāgā, annasyātmā. Only annasyātmā.

iii. Vidyuti purushah.
tegasvi.

iii. Id.
tegasy ātmā. satyas- syātmā.

iii b. stanayitnau puru- shah.
sabdasyātmā.

iv. Ākāse purushah.
pūrnam apravarti.

iv. Id. (5)
pūrnam apravarti brahma. apravṛtī.

v. Vāyau purushah.
indro vaikuntoḥ 'pa- rāgitā senā.

v. Id. (4)
Id.

vi. Agnau purushah.
vishāsahik.

vi. Id.
Id.

pratirūpah.

vii. Id.
nāmnasyātmā. tegasa ātmā.

viii. Ādarse purushah.
rośishnuḥ.

viii. Id.
pratirūpah.

viii b. pratisrūkṣyām pu- rushah. (9)
dvitiyō 'napagah. a- suh.

ix. Yantam paskāk khab- dah.
asuh.

ix. Yah sabdah purush- ham anveti. (10)sabdē.
Id. mṛtyuḥ.
3. Bālāki said: 'The person that is in the sun, on him I meditate (as Brahman).'

Agātaśatru said to him: 'No, no! do not challenge me (to a disputation) on this. I meditate on him who is called great, clad in white raiment, the supreme, the head of all beings. Whoso meditates

1 The king means to say that he knows this already, and that he can mention not only the predicates of the person in the sun thus meditated on as Brahman, but also the rewards of such meditation.

2 This is properly a predicate of the moon, and used as such in the Brāhṇad-āraṇyaka-upanishad, in the second paragraph of the dialogue.
on him thus, becomes supreme, and the head of all beings.

4. Bālāki said: ‘The person that is in the moon, on him I meditate.’

Agātasatru said to him: ‘Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as Soma, the king, the self, (source) of all food. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes the self, (source) of all food.’

5. Bālāki said: ‘The person that is in the lightning, on him I meditate.’

Agātasatru said to him: ‘Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the self in light. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes the self in light.’

6. Bālāki said: ‘The person that is in the thunder, on him I meditate.’

Agātasatru said to him: ‘Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the self of sound. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes the self of sound.’

7. Bālāki said: ‘The person that is in the ether, on him I meditate.’

Agātasatru said to him: ‘Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the full, quiescent Brahman. Whoso meditates on him thus, is filled with offspring and cattle. Neither he himself nor his offspring dies before the time.’

8. Bālāki said: ‘The person that is in the air, on him I meditate.’

Agātasatru said to him: ‘Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as Indra Vaikuntha, as the unconquerable army. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes victorious, unconquerable, conquering his enemies.’

---

1 This is not mentioned in the Brāhad-āranyaka.
9. Bālāki said: 'The person that is in the fire, on him I meditate.'

Agātasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as powerful. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes powerful among others.'

10. Bālāki said: 'The person that is in the water, on him I meditate.'

Agātasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the self of the name. Whoso meditates on him thus, becomes the self of the name.' So far with regard to deities (mythological); now with regard to the body (physiological).

11. Bālāki said: 'The person that is in the mirror, on him I meditate.'

Agātasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the likeness. Whoso meditates on him thus, to him a son is born in his family who is his likeness, not one who is not his likeness.'

12. Bālāki said: 'The person that is in the echo, on him I meditate.'

Agātasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the second, who never goes away. Whoso meditates on him thus, he gets a second from his second (his wife), he becomes doubled.'

13. Bālāki said: 'The sound that follows a man, on that I meditate.'

Agātasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on

---

1 Instead of anyeshu, the second text, as printed by Professor Cowell, has any esha.
2 This paragraph does not occur in the Brhad-āranyaka.
this. I meditate on him as life. Whoso meditates on him thus, neither he himself nor his offspring will faint before the time.'

14. Bâlåki said: 'The person that is in the shadow, on him I meditate.'

Agâtasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as death. Whoso meditates on him thus, neither he himself nor his offspring will die before the time.'

15. Bâlåki said: 'The person that is embodied, on him I meditate.'

Agâtasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as Lord of creatures. Whoso meditates on him thus, is multiplied in offspring and cattle.'

16. Bâlåki said: 'The Self which is conscious (prâgña), and by whom he who sleeps here, walks about in sleep, on him I meditate.'

Agâtasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as Yama the king. Whoso meditates on him thus, everything is subdued for his excellencies.'

17. Bâlåki said: 'The person that is in the right eye, on him I meditate.'

Agâtasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the self of the name, as the self of fire, as the self of splendour. Whoso meditates on him thus, he becomes the self of these.'

18. Bâlåki said: 'The person that is in the left eye, on him I meditate.'

Agâtasatru said to him: 'Do not challenge me on this. I meditate on him as the self of the true, as the self of lightning, as the self of light. Whoso meditates on him thus, he becomes the self of these.'

19. After this Bālāki became silent. Agātāsatu said to him: 'Thus far only (do you know), O Bālāki? 'Thus far only,' replied Bālāki.

Then Agātāsatu said to him: 'Vainly did you challenge me, saying: "Shall I tell you Brahma?" O Bālāki, he who is the maker of those persons (whom you mentioned), he of whom all this is the work, he alone is to be known.'

Thereupon Bālāki came, carrying fuel in his hand, saying: 'May I come to you as a pupil?' Agātāsatu said to him: 'I deem it improper that a Kshatriya should initiate a Brāhmaṇa. Come, I shall make you know clearly.' Then taking him by the hand, he went forth. And the two together came to a person who was asleep. And Agātāsatu called him, saying: 'Thou great one, clad in white raiment, Soma, King!.' But he remained lying. Then he pushed him with a stick, and he rose at once. Then said Agātāsatu to him: 'Bālāki, where did this person here sleep? Where was he? Whence came he thus back?' Bālāki did not know.

20. And Agātāsatu said to him: 'Where this person here slept, where he was, whence he thus came back, is this: The arteries of the heart called Hita extend from the heart of the person towards the surrounding body. Small as a hair divided a thousand times, they stand full of a thin fluid of various colours, white, black, yellow, red. In these the person is when sleeping he sees no dream.
Then he becomes one with that prâna alone. Then speech goes to him with all names, the eye with all forms, the ear with all sounds, the mind with all thoughts. And when he awakes, then, as from a burning fire, sparks proceed in all directions, thus from that self the prânas (speech, &c.) proceed, each towards its place, from the prânas the gods, from the gods the worlds. And as a razor might be fitted in a razor-case, or as fire in the fire-place (the arani on the altar), even thus this conscious self enters the self of the body (considers the body as himself) to the very hairs and nails. And the other selves (such as speech, &c.) follow that self, as his people follow the master of the house. And as the master feeds with his people, nay, as his people feed on the master, thus does this conscious self feed with the other selves, as a master with his people, and the other selves follow him, as his people follow the master. So long as Indra did not understand that self, the Asuras conquered him. When he understood it, he conquered the Asuras and obtained the pre-eminence among all gods, sovereignty, supremacy. And thus also he who knows this obtains pre-eminence among all beings, sovereignty, supremacy,—yea, he who knows this.
VĀGASANEYI-SAMHITĀ-UPANISHAD.

1. All this, whatsoever moves on earth, is to be hidden in the Lord (the Self). When thou hast surrendered all this, then thou mayest enjoy. Do not covet the wealth of any man!

2. Though a man may wish to live a hundred years, performing works, it will be thus with him; but not in any other way: work will thus not cling to a man.

3. There are the worlds of the Asuras covered with blind darkness. Those who have destroyed their self (who perform works, without having arrived at a knowledge of the true Self), go after death to those worlds.

4. That one (the Self), though never stirring, is swifter than thought. The Devas (senses) never reached it, it walked before them. Though standing still, it overtakes the others who are running. Mātarisvan (the wind, the moving spirit) bestows powers on it.

1 Asuryā, Vāg. Samhita; asūryā, Upan. Asuryā in the Upanishads in the sense of belonging to the Asuras, i.e. gods, is exceptional. I should prefer asūryā, sunless, as we find asūrye' tamasi in the Rig-veda, V, 32, 6.

2 Pūrvam arsat, Vāg. Samh.; pūrvam arshat, Upan. Mahādhara suggests also arsat as a contraction of a-risat, not perishing.

3 Apas is explained by karmāni, acts, in which case it would be meant for ápas, opus. But the Vāg. Samhitā accentuates apás, i.e.
5. It stirs and it stirs not; it is far, and likewise near\(^1\). It is inside of all this, and it is outside of all this.

6. And he who beholds all beings in the Self, and the Self in all beings, he never turns away from it\(^2\).

7. When to a man who understands, the Self has become all things, what sorrow, what trouble can there be to him who once beheld that unity?

8. He\(^3\) (the Self) encircled all, bright, incorporeal, scatheless, without muscles, pure, untouched by evil; a seer, wise, omnipresent, self-existent, he disposed all things rightly for eternal years.

9. All who worship what is not real knowledge (good works), enter into blind darkness: those who delight in real knowledge, enter, as it were, into greater darkness.

10. One thing, they say, is obtained from real knowledge; another, they say, from what is not knowledge. Thus we have heard from the wise who taught us this\(^4\).

11. He who knows at the same time both knowledge and not-knowledge, overcomes death through not-knowledge, and obtains immortality through knowledge.

12. All who worship what is not the true cause, aquas, and Ânandagiri explains that water stands for acts, because most sacrificial acts are performed with water.

\(^1\) Tad v antike, Vāg. Samh.; tadvad antike, Upan.

\(^2\) Viśkitasati, Vāg. Samh.; viṣugupsate, Upan.

\(^3\) Saṅkara takes the subject to be the Self, and explains the neuter adjectives as masculines. Mahidhara takes the subject to be the man who has acquired a knowledge of the Self, and who reaches the bright, incorporeal Brahman, &c. Mahidhara, however, likewise allows the former explanation.

enter into blind darkness: those who delight in the true cause, enter, as it were, into greater darkness.

13. One thing, they say, is obtained from (knowledge of) the cause; another, they say, from (knowledge of) what is not the cause. Thus we have heard from the wise who taught us this.

14. He who knows at the same time both the cause and the destruction (the perishable body), overcomes death by destruction (the perishable body), and obtains immortality through (knowledge of) the true cause.

15. The door of the True is covered with a golden disk. Open that, O Pûshan, that we may see the nature of the True.

16. O Pûshan, only seer, Yama (judge), Sûrya (sun), son of Pragâpati, spread thy rays and gather them! The light which is thy fairest form, I see it. I am what He is (viz. the person in the sun).

17. Breath to air, and to the immortal! Then this my body ends in ashes. Om! Mind, remember! Remember thy deeds! Mind, remember! Remember thy deeds!

18. Agni, lead us on to wealth (beatitude) by a good path, thou, O God, who knowest all things!

1 Mahâdhara on verse 17: 'The face of the true (purusha in the sun) is covered by a golden disk.'
3 Asau purushâ should probably be omitted.
4 These lines are supposed to be uttered by a man in the hour of death.
6 The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ reads: Om, krato smara, khîbe smara, krîtam smara. Uva/a holds that Agni, fire, who has been worshipped in youth and manhood, is here invoked in the form of mind, or that kratu is meant for sacrifice. 'Agni, remember me! Think of the world! Remember my deeds!'
Keep far from us crooked evil, and we shall offer thee the fullest praise! (Rv. I, 189, i.)

This Upanishad, though apparently simple and intelligible, is in reality one of the most difficult to understand properly. Coming at the end of the Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ, in which the sacrifices and the hymns to be used by the officiating priests have been described, it begins by declaring that all has to be surrendered to the Lord. The name is, lord, is peculiar, as having a far more personal colouring than Atman, Self, or Brahman, the usual names given by the Upanishads to what is the object of the highest knowledge.

Next follows a permission to continue the performance of sacrifices, provided that all desires have been surrendered. And here occurs our first difficulty, which has perplexed ancient as well as modern commentators.

I shall try, first of all, to justify my own translation. I hold that the Upanishad wishes to teach the uselessness by themselves of all good works, whether we call them sacrificial, legal, or moral, and yet, at the same time, to recognise, if not the necessity, at least the harmlessness of good works, provided they are performed without any selfish motives, without any desire of reward, but simply as a preparation for higher knowledge, as a means, in fact, of subduing all passions, and producing that serenity of mind without which man is incapable of receiving the highest knowledge. From that point of view the Upanishad may well say, Let a man wish to live here his appointed time, let him even perform all works. If only he knows that all must be surrendered to the Lord, then the work done by him will not cling to him. It will not work on and produce effect after effect, nor will it involve him in a succession of new births in which to enjoy the reward of his works, but it will leave him free to enjoy the blessings of the highest knowledge. It will have served as a preparation for that higher knowledge which the Upanishad imparts, and which secures freedom from further births.

The expression 'na karma lipyate nare' seems to me to admit of this one explanation only, viz. that work done does not cling to man, provided he has acquired the highest knowledge. Similar expressions occur again and again. Lip was, no doubt, used originally of evil deeds which became, as it were, engrained in man; but afterwards of all work, even of good work, if done with a desire of reward. The doctrine of the Upanishads is throughout that orthodoxy and sacrifice can procure a limited beatitude only, and that they are a hindrance to real salvation, which can be obtained by knowledge alone. In our passage therefore we can recognise one meaning only, viz. that work does not cling to man or stain him, if only he knows, i.e. if he has been enlightened by the Upanishad.

Saṅkara, in his commentary on the Vedānta-sūtras III, 4, 7; 13; 14, takes the same view of this passage. The opponent of Bādarāyana, in this case, Gai in himself, maintains that karma, work, is indispensable to knowledge, and among other arguments, he says, III, 4, 7, that it is so 'Niyamāt,' 'Because it is so laid down by the law.' The passage here referred to is, according to Saṅkara, our very verse, which, he thinks, should be translated as follows: 'Let a man wish to live a hundred years here (in this body) performing works; thus will an evil deed not cling to thee, while thou art a man; there is no other way but this by which to escape the influence of works.' In answer to this, Bādarāyana says, first of all, III, 4, 13, that this rule may refer to all men in general, and not to one who knows; or, III, 4, 14, if it refers to a man who knows, that then the permission to perform works is only intended to exalt the value of knowledge, the meaning being that even to a man who performs sacrifices all his life, work does not cling, if only he knows;—such being the power of knowledge.

The same Saṅkara, however, who here sees quite clearly that this verse refers to a man who knows, explains it in the Upanishad as referring to a man who does not know (itarasyānātmaṇaḥatayāt-magrahanāsaktasya). It would then mean: 'Let such a one, while performing works here on earth, wish to live a hundred years. In this manner there is no other way for him but this (the performance of sacrifices), so that an evil deed should not be engrained, or so that he should not be stained by such a deed.' The first and second verses of the Upanishad would thus represent the two paths of life, that of knowledge and that of works, and the following verses would explain the rewards assigned to each.

Mahidhara, in his commentary on the Vāgasaneyi-saṃhitā, steers at first a middle course. He would translate: 'Let one who performs the Agnihotra and other sacrifices, without any desire of reward, wish to live here a hundred years. If thou do so, there will be salvation for thee, not otherwise. There are many roads that lead to heaven, but one only leading to salvation, namely, performance of good works, without any desire of reward, which produces a pure heart. Work thus done, merely as a preparation for salvation, does not cling to man, i.e. it produces a pure heart, but does not entail any further consequences.' So far he agrees with Uva\textit{\textasciitilde}a's explanation\textsuperscript{1}. He allows, however, another explanation also, so that the second line would convey the meaning: 'If a man lives thus (performing good works), then there is no other way by which an evil deed should not be engrained; i.e. in order to escape the power of sin, he must all his life perform sacred acts.'

Next follows a description of the lot of those who, immersed in works, have not arrived at the highest knowledge, and have not recovered their true self in the Highest Self, or Brahman. That Brahman, though the name is not used here, is then described, and salvation is promised to the man who beholds all things in the Self and the Self in all things.

The verses 9–14 are again full of difficulty, not so much in themselves as in their relation to the general system of thought which prevails in the Upanishads, and forms the foundation of the Ved\textit{\textasciitilde}nta philosophy. The commentators vary considerably in their interpretations. Sa\textit{\textasciitilde}kara explains avidy\textit{\textasciitilde}, not-knowledge, by good works, particularly sacrifice, performed with a hope of reward; vidy\textit{\textasciitilde}, or knowledge, by a knowledge of the gods, but not, as yet, of the highest Brahman. The former is generally supposed to lead the sacrificer to the \textit{pitr\textasciitilde}loka, the world of the fathers, from whence he returns to a series of new births; the latter to the devaloka, the world of the gods, from whence he may either proceed to Brahman, or enter upon a new round of existences. The question then arises, how in our passage the former could be said to lead to blind darkness, the latter to still greater darkness. But for that statement, I have no doubt that all the commentators would, as usual, have taken vidy\textit{\textasciitilde} for the knowledge of the Highest Brahman, and avidy\textit{\textasciitilde} for orthodox belief in the gods and good works, the former securing immortality in the sense of freedom from new births, while the reward of the latter is blessedness in heaven for a limited period, but without freedom from new births.

This antithesis between vidy\textit{\textasciitilde} and avidy\textit{\textasciitilde} seems to me so firmly established that I cannot bring myself to surrender it here. Though this Upanishad has its own very peculiar character, yet its object is, after all, to impart a knowledge of the Highest Self, and not to inculcate merely a difference between faith in the ordinary gods and good works. It was distinctly said before (ver. 3), that those who have destroyed their self, i.e. who perform works only, and have not arrived at a knowledge of the true Self, go to the worlds of the Asuras, which are covered with blind darkness. If then the same blind darkness is said in verse 9 to be the lot of those who worship not-knowledge, this can only mean those who have not discovered the true Self, but are satisfied with the performance of good works. And if those who perform good works are opposed to others who delight in true knowledge, that knowledge can be the knowledge of the true Self only.

\textsuperscript{1} Uva\textit{\textasciitilde}a explains \textit{gig\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde} for \textit{gig\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde}\textit{\textasciitilde} as a purusha\textit{\textasciitilde}vyatay\textit{\textasciitilde}h.

The difficulty therefore which has perplexed Sāṅkara is this, how, while the orthodox believer is said to enter into blind darkness, the true disciple, who has acquired a knowledge of the true Self, could be said to enter into still greater darkness. While Sāṅkara in this case seems hardly to have caught the drift of the Upanishad, Uvāṭa and Mahīḍhara propose an explanation which is far more satisfactory. They perceive that the chief stress must be laid on the words ubhayam saha, 'both together,' in verses 11 and 14. The doctrine of certain Vedānta philosophers was that works, though they cannot by themselves lead to salvation, are useful as a preparation for the highest knowledge, and that those who imagine that they can attain the highest knowledge without such previous preparation, are utterly mistaken. From this point of view therefore the author of the Upanishad might well say that those who give themselves to what is not knowledge, i.e. to sacrificial and other good works, enter into darkness, but that those who delight altogether in knowledge, despising the previous discipline of works, deceive themselves and enter into still greater darkness.

Then follows the next verse, simply stating that, according to the teaching of wise people, the reward of knowledge is one thing, the reward of ignorance, i.e. trust in sacrifice, another. Here Mahīḍhara is right again by assigning the pitṛloka, the world of the fathers, as the reward of the ignorant; the devaloka, the world of the gods, as the reward of the enlightened, provided that from the world of the gods they pass on to the knowledge of the Highest Self or Brahman.

The third verse contains the strongest confirmation of Mahīḍhara's view. Here it is laid down distinctly that he only who knows both together, both what is called ignorance and what is called knowledge, can be saved, because by good works he overcomes death, here explained by natural works, and by knowledge he obtains the Immortal, here explained by oneness with the gods, the last step that leads on to oneness with Brahman.

Uvāṭa, who takes the same view of these verses, explains at once, and even more boldly than Mahîdhara, vidyâ, or knowledge, by brahmavijnâna, knowledge of Brahman, which by itself, and if not preceded by works, leads to even greater darkness than what is called ignorance, i. e. sacrifice and orthodoxy without knowledge.

The three corresponding verses, treating of sambhûti and asambhûti instead of vidyâ and avidyâ, stand first in the Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ. They must necessarily be explained in accordance with our explanation of the former verses, i. e. sambhûti must correspond to vidyâ, it must be meant for the true cause, i. e. for Brahman, while asambhûti must correspond with avidyâ, as a name of what is not real, but phenomenal only and perishable.

Mahîdhara thinks that these verses refer to the Bauddhas, which can hardly be admitted, unless we take Buddhist in a very general sense. Uvaêa puts the Lokâyatâs in their place. It is curious also to observe that Mahîdhara, following Uvaêa, explains asambhûti at first by the denial of the resurrection of the body, while he takes sambhûti rightly for Brahman. I have chiefly followed Uvaêa's commentary, except in his first explanation of asambhûti, resurrection. In what follows Uvaêa explains sambhûti rightly by the only cause of the origin of the whole world, i. e. Brahman, while he takes vinâsa, destruction, as a name of the perishable body.

Sânkara sees much more in these three verses than Uvaêa. He takes asambhûti as a name of Prakrîtî, the undeveloped cause, sambhûti as a name of the phenomenal Brahman or Hiranyagarbha. From a worship of the latter a man obtains supernatural powers, from devotion to the former, absorption in Prakrîtî.

Mahîdhara also takes a similar view, and he allows, like Sânkara, another reading, viz. sambhûtim avinâsam ka, and avinârena mrîtyum tîrtvâ. In this case the sense would be: 'He who knows the worship both of the developed and the undeveloped,overcomes

---

1 Mahîdhara decides in the end that vidyâ and amrîtam must here be taken in a limited or relative sense, tasmâd vidyopâsanâ- mrîtam kâpekshikam iti dik, and so agrees on the whole with Sânkara, pp. 25-27.

2 Shâdanushûkhaḥ, lokâyatâkâḥ prastûyante yeshâm etad darsanam.

3 Mrîtasya sataḥ punâḥ sambhavo nâsti, atâḥ sarîragrahnaḥ asmâkam muktir eva.

4 Samastasya gâgatâḥ sambhavaikahetu brahma.

5 Vinâsam vinâsâ ka vapuh sarîram.
death, i.e. such evil as sin, passion, &c., through worship of the undeveloped, while he obtains through worship of the developed, i.e. of Hiranyagarbha, immortality, absorption in Prakṛiti."

All these forced explanations to which the commentators have recourse, arise from the shifting views held by various authorities with regard to the value of works. Our Upanishad seems to me to propound the doctrine that works, though in themselves useless, or even mischievous, if performed with a view to any present or future rewards, are necessary as a preparatory discipline. This is or was for a long time the orthodox view. Each man was required to pass through the āśramas, or stages of student and householder, before he was admitted to the freedom of a Sannyāsin. As on a ladder, no step was to be skipped. Those who attempted to do so, were considered to have broken the old law, and in some respects they may indeed be looked upon as the true precursors of the Buddhists.

Nevertheless the opposite doctrine, that a man whose mind had become enlightened, might at once drop the fetters of the law, without performing all the tedious duties of student and householder, had strong supporters too among orthodox philosophers. Cases of such rapid conversion occur in the ancient traditions, and Bādarāyana himself was obliged to admit the possibility of freedom and salvation without works, though maintaining the superiority of the usual course, which led on gradually from works to enlightenment and salvation. It was from an unwillingness to assent to the decided teaching of the Īṣā-upanishad that Saṅkara attempted to explain vidyā, knowledge, in a limited sense, as knowledge of the gods, and not yet knowledge of Brahman. He would not admit that knowledge without works could lead to darkness, and even to greater darkness than works without knowledge. Our Upanishad seems to have dreaded libertinism, knowledge without works, more even than ritualism, works without knowledge, and its true object was to show that orthodoxy and sacrifice, though useless in themselves, must always form the preparation for higher enlightenment.

How misleading Saṅkara’s explanation may prove, we can see from the translation of this Upanishad by Rammohun Roy. He followed Saṅkara implicitly, and this is the sense which he drew from the text:

9. Those observers of religious rites that perform only the worship of the sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors,

---

1 Vedānta-sūtras III, 4, 36-39.
to men, and to other creatures, without regarding the worship of celestial gods, shall enter into the dark region: and those practisers of religious ceremonies who habitually worship the celestial gods only, disregarding the worship of the sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, shall enter into a region still darker than the former.

'10. It is said that adoration of the celestial gods produces one consequence; and that the performance of the worship of sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, produce another: thus have we heard from learned men, who have distinctly explained the subject to us.

'11. Of those observers of ceremonies whosoever, knowing that adoration of celestial gods, as well as the worship of the sacred fire, and oblation to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, should be observed alike by the same individual, performs them both, will, by means of the latter, surmount the obstacles presented by natural temptations, and will attain the state of the celestial gods through the practice of the former.

'12. Those observers of religious rites who worship Prakṛiti alone (Prakṛiti or nature, who, though insensible, influenced by the Supreme Spirit, operates throughout the universe) shall enter into the dark region: and those practisers of religious ceremonies that are devoted to worship solely the prior operating sensitive particle, allegorically called Brahmā, shall enter into a region much more dark than the former.

'13. It is said that one consequence may be attained by the worship of Brahmā, and another by the adoration of Prakṛiti. Thus have we heard from learned men, who have distinctly explained the subject to us.

'14. Of those observers of ceremonies, whatever person, knowing that the adoration of Prakṛiti and that of Brahmā should be together observed by the same individual, performs them both, will by means of the latter overcome indigence, and will attain the state of Prakṛiti, through the practice of the former.'
Sacred Books of the East

Translated by Various Oriental Scholars

And edited by

F. Max Müller

* * This Series is published with the sanction and co-operation of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

Report presented to the Académie des Inscriptions, May 11, 1883, by M. Ernest Renan.

M. Renan présente trois nouveaux volumes de la grande collection des "Livres sacrés de l'Orient" (Sacred Books of the East), que dirige à Oxford, avec une si vaste érudition et une critique si sûre, le savant associé de l'Academie des Inscriptions, M. Max Müller. La première série de ce beau recueil, composée de 24 volumes, est presque achevée. M. Max Müller se propose d'en publier une seconde, dont l'intérêt historique et religieux ne sera pas moindre. M. Max Müller a su se procurer la collaboration des savans les plus éminens d'Europe et d'Asie. L'Université d'Oxford, que cette grande publication honore au plus haut degré, doit tenir à continuer dans les plus larges proportions une œuvre aussi philosophiquement conçue que savamment exécutée.

Extract from the Quarterly Review.

We rejoice to notice that a second series of these translations has been announced and has actually begun to appear. The stones, at least, out of which a stately edifice may hereafter arise, are here being brought together. Prof. Max Müller has deserved well of scientific history. Not a few minds owe to his enticing words their first attraction to this branch of study. But no work of his, not even the great edition of the Rig-Veda, can compare in importance or in usefulness with this English translation of the Sacred Books of the East, which has been devised by his foresight, successfully brought so far by his persuasive and organising power, and will, we trust, by the assistance of the distinguished scholars he has gathered round him, be carried in due time to a happy completion.

Professor E. Hardy, Inaugural Lecture in the University of Freiburg, 1887.

Die allgemeine vergleichende Religionswissenschaft datirt von jenem grossartigen, in seiner Art einzig dastehenden Unternehmen, zu welchem auf Anregung Max Müllers im Jahre 1874 auf dem internationalen Orientalistencongress in London der Grundstein gelegt worden war, die Übersetzung der heiligen Bücher des Ostens (the Sacred Books of the East).
FIRST SERIES.

VOL. I. The Upanishads.
Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âranyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmaṇa-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Upanishads contain the philosophy of the Veda. They have become the foundation of the later Vedaánta doctrines, and indirectly of Buddhism. Schopenhauer, speaking of the Upanishads, says: 'In the whole world there is no study so beneficial and so elevating as that of the Upanishads. It has been the solace of my life, it will be the solace of my death.'

[See also Vol. XV.]

VOL. II. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas,
As taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vâsishtâ, and Baudhâyana. Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. Part I. Āpastamba and Gautama. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Sacred Laws of the Āryas contain the original treatises on which the Laws of Manu and other lawgivers were founded.

[See also Vol. XIV.]

VOL. III. The Sacred Books of China.
The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Part I. The Shû King, The Religious Portions of the Shi King, and The Hsiào King. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

Confucius was a collector of ancient traditions, not the founder of a new religion. As he lived in the sixth and fifth centuries B.C. his works are of unique interest for the study of Ethology.

[See also Vols. XVI, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXIX, and XL.]

VOL. IV. The Zend-Avesta.
Translated by JAMES DARMESTETER. Part I. The Vendîdâd. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Zend-Avesta contains the relics of what was the religion of Cyrus, Darius, and Xerxes, and, but for the battle of Marathon, might have become the religion of Europe. It forms to the present day the sacred book of the Parsis, the so-called fire-worshippers. Two more volumes will complete the translation of all that is left us of Zoroaster's religion.

[See also Vols. XXIII and XXXI.]

VOL. V. Pahlavi Texts.
Translated by E. W. West. Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

The Pahlavi Texts comprise the theological literature of the revival of Zoroaster's religion, beginning with the Sassanian dynasty. They are important for a study of Gnosticism.

VOLS. VI AND IX. The Qur'ân.
Parts I and II. Translated by E. H. Palmer. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation, carried out according to his own peculiar views of the origin of the Qur'ân, was the last great work of E. H. Palmer, before he was murdered in Egypt.

VOL. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu.
Translated by Julius Jolly. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A collection of legal aphorisms, closely connected with one of the oldest Vedic schools, the Kathas, but considerably added to in later time. Of importance for a critical study of the Laws of Manu.

VOL. VIII. The Bhagavadgita, with The Sanatsugâtiya, and The Anugîtâ.
Translated by Kashinâth Trimbak Telang. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The earliest philosophical and religious poem of India. It has been paraphrased in Arnold's 'Song Celestial.'

VOL. X. The Dhammapada,
Translated from Pâli by F. Max Müller; and

The Sutta-Nipâta,
Translated from Pâli by V. Fauserbûll; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The Dhammapada contains the quintessence of Buddhist morality. The Sutta-Nipâta gives the authentic teaching of Buddha on some of the fundamental principles of religion.
VOL. XI. Buddhist Suttas.
Translated from Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids. 1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhamma-kakka-ppavattana Sutta. 3. The Tevīgga Suttanta; 4. The Ākaṇkheyya Sutta; 5. The Kētokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahā-sudassana Suttanta; 7. The Saddāsava Sutta. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
A collection of the most important religious, moral, and philosophical discourses taken from the sacred canon of the Buddhists.

VOL. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School.
Translated by Julius Eggeling. Part I. Books I and II. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
A minute account of the sacrificial ceremonies of the Vedic age.
It contains the earliest account of the Deluge in India.
[See also Vols. XXVI, XLI.]

VOL. XIII. Vinaya Texts.
Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part I. The Pātimokkha. The Mahāvagga, I–IV. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
The Vinaya Texts give for the first time a translation of the moral code of the Buddhist religion as settled in the third century B.C.
[See also Vols. XVII and XX.]

VOL. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas,
As taught in the Schools of Apastamba, Gautama, Vāsishtha, and Baudhāyana. Translated by Georg Büchner. Part II. Vāsishtha and Baudhāyana. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XV. The Upanishads.

VOL. XVI. The Sacred Books of China.
The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part II. The Yi King. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
[See also Vols. XXVII, XXVIII.]

VOL. XVII. Vinaya Texts.
Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part II. The Mahāvagga V–X. The Kullavagga, I–III. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
VOL. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts.
Translated by E. W. West. Part II. The Dādīstān-i Dinik and The Epistles of Mānūskhāhar. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsang-king.
A Life of Buddha by Asvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by Samuel Beal. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

This life of Buddha was translated from Sanskrit into Chinese, A.D. 420. It contains many legends, some of which show a certain similarity to the Evangelium infantiae, &c.

VOL. XX. Vinaya Texts.
Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV-XII. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXI. The Saddharma-pundarīka; or, The Lotus of the True Law.
Translated by H. Kern. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

'The Lotus of the true Law,' a canonical book of the Northern Buddhists, translated from Sanskrit. There is a Chinese translation of this book which was finished as early as the year 286 A.D.

VOL. XXII. Gaina-Sūtras.
Translated from Prākrit by Hermann Jacobi. Part I. The Ākārāṅga-Sūtra and The Kalpa-Sūtra. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

The religion of the Gainas was founded by a contemporary of Buddha. It still counts numerous adherents in India, while there are no Buddhists left in India proper.
Part II, in preparation.

VOL. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta.
Translated by James Darmesteter. Part II. The Sirózahs, Yasts, and Nyáyis. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts.
Translated by E. W. West. Part III. Dinâ-i Mainôg-Khirad, Sikand-gúmânik Vigår, and Sad Dar. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.
SECOND SERIES.

VOL. XXV. Manu.

Translated by GEORG BÜHLER. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

This translation is founded on that of Sir William Jones, which has been carefully revised and corrected with the help of seven native Commentaries. An Appendix contains all the quotations from Manu which are found in the Hindu Law-books, translated for the use of the Law Courts in India. Another Appendix gives a synopsis of parallel passages from the six Dharma-sūtras, the other Śāraṇas, the Upanishads, the Mahābhārata, &c.

VOL. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa.

Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. Part II. Books III and IV. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOLS. XXVII AND XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China.

The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. Parts III and IV. The Lī Kī, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety, or Ceremonial Usages. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. each.

VOL. XXIX. The Grīhya-Sūtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part I. Sānkhyāyana, Āsvalāyana, Pāraskara, Khādīra. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

These rules of Domestic Ceremonies describe the home life of the ancient Āryas with a completeness and accuracy unmatched in any other literature. Some of these rules have been incorporated in the ancient Law-books.

VOL. XXX. The Grīhya-Sūtras, Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies.

Part II. Gobhila, Hiranyakesin, Āpastamba. Translated by HERMANN OLDENBERG. Āpastamba, Yāsīna-paribhashā-sūtras. Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta.

Part III. The Yasna, Visparad, Âfrinagān, Gāhs, and Miscellaneous Fragments. Translated by L. H. MILLS. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOL. XXXII. Vedic Hymns.

Translated by F. MAX MÜLLER. Part I. 8vo, cloth, 18s. 6d.
VOI. XXXIII. The Minor Law-books.
   Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. Part I. Nârada, Brihaspati.
   8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOI. XXXIV. The Vedânta-Sûtras, with the Commentary by Saîkaraâkârya. Part I.
   Translated by G. THIBAUT. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

VOI. XXXV. The Questions of King Milinda. Part I.
   Translated from the Pâli by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.
   8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOI. XXXVI. The Questions of King Milinda. Part II.
   [In the Press.]

VOI. XXXVII. The Contents of the Nasks, as stated
   Part I. Translated by E. W. WEST. 8vo, cloth, 15s.

VOI. XXXVIII. The Vedânta-Sûtras. Part II. [In the Press.]

VOI. XXXIX AND XL. The Sacred Books of China.
   The Texts of Tâoism. Translated by JAMES LEGGE. 8vo, cloth, 21s.

VOI. XLI. The Satapatha-Brâhmaâ. Part III. Translated by JULIUS EGGELING. [In the Press.]

VOI. XLII. The Buddha-ârâita. Translated by
   E. B. COWELL. The Sukhâvati-vyûha. Translated by F.
   MAX MÜLLER. [In the Press.]

VOI. XLIII AND XLIV. The Satapatha-Brâhmaâ.
   Parts IV and V. [In preparation.]

VOI. XLV. The Gaina-Sûtras. Part II. [In preparation.]

VOI. XLVI. The Vedânta-Sûtras. Part III. [In preparation.]

VOI. XLVII. The Contents of the Nasks. Part II.
   [In preparation.]

VOI. XLVIII. Vedic Hymns. Part II. [In preparation.]
RECENT ORIENTAL WORKS.

Anecdota Oxoniensia.
ARYAN SERIES.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. I. Vagrakkhedikā; The Diamond-Cutter.
Edited by F. Max Müller, M.A. Small 4to, 3s. 6d.
One of the most famous metaphysical treatises of the Mahāyāna Buddhists.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. II. Sukhāvati-Vyūha: Description of Sukhāvati, the Land of Bliss.
Edited by F. Max Müller, M.A., and Bunyiu Nanjio. With two Appendices: (1) Text and Translation of Saṅghavarman’s Chinese Version of the Poetical Portions of the Sukhāvati-Vyūha; (2) Sanskrit Text of the Smaller Sukhāvati-Vyūha. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.
The editio princeps of the Sacred Book of one of the largest and most influential sects of Buddhism, numbering more than ten millions of followers in Japan alone.

Buddhist Texts from Japan. III. The Ancient Palm-Leaves containing the Pragūpā-Parāmitā-Hridaya-Sūtra and the Ushnisha-Vigaya-Dhāranī.
Edited by F. Max Müller, M.A., and Bunyiu Nanjio, M.A. With an Appendix by G. Bühler, C.I.E. With many Plates. Small 4to, 10s.
Contains facsimiles of the oldest Sanskrit MS. at present known.

Dharma-Samgraha, an Ancient Collection of Buddhist Technical Terms.
Prepared for publication by Kenjū Kasawara, a Buddhist Priest from Japan, and, after his death, edited by F. Max Müller and H. Wenzel. Small 4to, 7s. 6d.

Kātāyana’s Sarvanukramani of the Rigveda.
With Extracts from Shadgurusishyā’s Commentary entitled Vedārthadipikā. Edited by A.A. Macdonell, M.A., Ph.D. 16s.

Oxford
AT THE CLARENDON PRESS
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE
OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Digitized by Microsoft®